Dole pledge avoided by Thatcher

By Our Political Reporter The Prime Minister yesterday deliberately left open the possi-bility of a future cut in the real value of unemployment and other short-term benefits as a contribution to efforts to reduce Government spending. Far from repudiating Mr

Nigel Lawson, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for saying that the future value of benefit against prices could not be guaranteed, Mrs Thatcher went out of her way in the Commons to stress that the pledge given in the Conservative Party manifesto to "price protect" pensions and other linked long-term benefits did not apply to dole

Paris calls off world exposition

From Diana Geddes Paris

France has abandoned its plans for a multi-billion franc "universal exposition" in Paris in 1989 to commemorate the bicentenary of the French Revolution, because of opposition from local Gaullist

The world "expo", the first to be held in Paris for more than 50 years, was expected to cos 10 to 14 billion francs (£850m to £1,200m), depending on the site chosen, and to attract more than 60 million people over a six-month period. Receipts were expected to total 50 billion francs.

The exposition would have given a boost to industry, brought in much-needed foreign currency, brought international presige to France, and left a lasting memorial to the most important event in French (Socialist) history. Monuments left by previous expositions include the Eiffel Tower of 1889, and the Grand Palace of 1900.

But the logistic problems involved, particularly transport and hotel accommodation, would have been enormous. M Jacques Chirac, the Gaullists mayor of, who initially gave his approval, decided last week that it was altogether too compllicated and risky at a time of economic crisis.

The Socialists believe, however, that M Chirac's decision was a politically-motivated act of vindictive sabotage and pique at being virtually excluded from the organization and management of the exposition.

There have been only three universal expositions since the last war. Brussels in 1958, Montreal in 1967 and Osaka in 1970. The first was held in London in 1851.

Mr Bruce Bailey, the plastic sugeon who led the team that sewed back the severed arm of a farm worker, called for the unit to be closed earlier this week because of the risk of infection. # Minimum wage vote by TGWU puts pressure on Labour Party

Pressure in the Labour Party

The conference of the General Workers' Union in the Isle of Man voted to press for a minimum wage of two thirds of national average earnings al-though union leaders, implacably opposed to incomes re-straint, emphasized that its introduction should not be underpinned by statute.

Yesterday's decision will be seen as a boost for the campaign for a minimum wage by those unions, such as the National Union of Public Employees, which have many low-paid members although their campaign is for a statutory minimum, a policy difference still to be reconciled with the TGWU.

Conference delegates also gave a strong reaffirmation of the TGWU commitment to free collective bargaining and rejected by a large margin a call for an agreement with a Labour government "on a policy covering prices and incomes as part of a genuine planned

> Strong support for an incomes policy came from Mr Kenneth Yeates, an unem-ployed chemical worker from London, who said that unfet-tered wage bargaining led to bigger increases for strong groups of workers, with weaker sections of the community suffering.

But other delegates argued that freedom to negotiate was basic to democracy and that incomes policies were always doomed to failure.

The move for the introduction of the national minimum wage was led by Miss Ann Pettifer, who argued that the problem of low pay would never be resolved without a minimum wage. She called for the TUC to campaign against government moves to repeal wages legislation.

Delegates to the National Union of Mineworkers' conference carried unanimously a resolution "rejecting the theory that reduced wages reduced living standards will solve Britain's economic crisis".

The pay claim, which is more flexible than for many years, will be the first big challenge to Cabinet attempts to keep down public sector pay rises to 2 to 3 per cent this winter.

The union's leaders are instructed to negotiate a substantial pay increase to reestablish the miners at the top of the industrial wages league and to recall the delegate conference if the coal board refuses to meet the demand. Should that conference so decide, a secret pithead vote "on industrial action including strike action" will take place.

Moving the pay resolution, Mr George Bolton, vice-presi-dent of the traditionally militant Scottish miners, targed delegates to go back to their pits and mobilize the men for Soundings taken among delegates by The Times over the past three days, suggest that the mood of delegates does not favour a strike about pay.

The timing of the ballot will be almost as critical as the issue on the voting paper. Some leftwingers want it to be called in November so that the pits could be stopped in the depths of winter, others want it put off as long as possible, preferably into 1984, to allow the forthcomign coalfield propaganda campaign to have an impact on the men.

In yesterday's pay debate, Mr Sam Thomson, vice-president of the Yorkshire miners, voiced the fear that Mr Ian MacGregor, who takes over as coal board chairman on September 1, will want to abolish the industry's annual national pay round in favour of area-by-area or pit-bypit productivity bargaining on the British Steel model.

Unlike other natrients, many trace elements, or minerals which are essential for proper growth, reproduction and health, are not fully absorbed.

Dr David Buss, of nutrition branch of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, lists seven of the more important trace elements studied in foods and diets by the ministry and the Government Chemist's laboratory. They are fron, zinc, copper, iodine, selenium, manganese and fluorine.

Estimates of the intake of trace elements by the population are made from three sources. One is a continuous food survey of 7,500 randomly selected British households. Another is the direct chemical analysis of a range of typical diets based on 68 key foods.

Third, the ministry and the Government Chemist have analysed a wide range of the more than 5,000 foods available.

The examination shows changes in the sources of trace elements. For example, despite a lower consumption of fish. the richest natural source of iodine, intakes from other 1112 sources have risen steeply. In particular, iodine contributions in from milk have increased from 14 micrograms to more than 90 micrograms a day.

Dr Buss reports that in addition to monitoring the seven more important trace elements, work has begun on studying chromium, cobalt, molybdenum and vanadium. Chemistry and Industry (No 13, July 4, 1983).

Research spending 'should be selective'

By Pearce Wright

Spending on research must be more selective because Britain cannot afford to explore every scientific avenue or develop every technology, according to a government report published esterday.

It says that more effort is needed to achieve stable cooperation between government and industry for crucial "generic" technologies to be estab-lished, and to exploit the results of defence research for commercial purposes.

The report by Sir Henry hilver, Vice-Chancellor of Chilver, Vice-Chancellor of Cranfield Institute of Tech-nology, and Sir Alec Merrison, Vice-Chancellor of Bristol University shows a total research expenditure in Britain of £3,500m a year, of which the Government provides £1,650m. It also shows that Britain spends £18 a year for each person on defence research and £47 for civil research. The figures for West Germany are £4 and £73; France £12 and £47; US £27 and £74; and Japan nil and £60. Sir Henry and Sir Alec prepared the report as chairmen respectively of the Cabinet's Advisory Council for Applied

Research Councils,
They say: "In the past it was possible to maintain a UK presence in the vast majority of areas of scientific inquiry; basic science was - at least by comparison with many applied science areas - a relatively cheap activity." But the scale on which some fundamental scientific problems have to be tackled, in particle physics for example, means that Britain's resources must be combined with those of other countries.

Thatcher declines to give long-term dole pledge

PM'S QUESTIONS

Mrs Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister, questioned in the Com-mons about future unemployment benefit rates, said that as already announced, benefits would be increased by 8.7 per cent from November. She did not, she said, understand what the debate was all about But she declined to ple the Government to increase the benefit in line with inflation for future years. It was not a linked long-term benefit, she said, and therefore on pledge about protection had been given at the election.

She said that after the Novembe uprating the value of the benefit would be higher than when the Conservatives took office.

Mr Greville Jamer (Leicester West, Lab) asked: When she met her ministerial colleagues today did she discuss with them the iniquitous proposal made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to reduce the real value of unemployment benefit?

Such a proposal would lack both compassion and common sense and adding to the suffering of the unemployed is no resolution whatever to the problems of the Mrs Thatcher: The decisions on the rate of unemployment benefit which apply from this House by the Secretary of State for Social Services the other day in this Parliament. We are restoring the 5 per cent cut made in 1982.

That means in November the That means in November the standard rates of memployment benefit go up by more than 8 per cent to £27.05 for a single person and 43.75 for a married couple. The rates have been fixed and announced in this House and I do not understand what the debate is not understand what the debate is Mr Michael Foot, Leader of the Opposition (Blaenau Gwent), When she told us she did not understand More tenants get right to buy

The evidence that council tenants preferred to own their homes was even more compelling now than it was in 1978 when a survey showed that home ownership was the preferred form of tenure for 90 per cent of those under age 45 and for 61 per cent of those over that age, Mr Ian Gow, Minister for Housing

He was moving the second reading of the Housing and Building Control Bill which extends the right to buy to tenants whose landlord owns a leashold rather than a freehold. The measure, which was going through the Lords when Parliament was dissolved for the general election, also increases the discount from 50 per cent to 60 per cent for tenants of 30 years standing

Mr Gow said that during the last Parliament more than 550,000 tenants bought their homes under the right to buy or under voluntary schemes. There were more than 150,000 right to buy sales in the pipeline.

Those figures (he said) tell their own story. This Bill carries a stage further the principles which inspired the Housing Act 1980.

The Bill extended the right to buy to public sector tenants of leasehold property, public sector included not only local authorities, but new town and housing association tenants. There were 50,000 such tenants in England and Wales and the Government saw no reason why they should be excluded from the right to buy.

The Government also proposed that the right to buy be extended to dwellings that had been adapted for use by the disabled. However, purpose-built and sheltered accom-

The Inner London Education Authority is to be abolished by the Government and replaced by a joint board of elected representatives from inner London boroughs, Mr. Robert Dunn, Under Secretary of State for Education and Science, said when answering questions for the first time since his appointment. Mr Nigel Forman (Carshalton and Vallington, C) asked whether the liovernment intended to abolish ILEA in the context of abolition of the Greater London Council. Mr Dunn replied it did.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor (Upminster, C): Will the minister confirm it is the Government's intention to abolish this incompetent and mefficient education authority Mr Dunn: Yes. We shall be replacing it with a joint board based on elected representatives of inner London boroughs and the City. Mr Frank Dobson, an Opposition spokesman on education (Holborn and St Pancras, Lab): When her Majesty's Inspectors considered 96 education authorities in England and Wales they found only five satisfactory and one was ILEA. # Lévesque out on a limb

The Parti Québeceis Government of Quebec, whose separa-Canadians to shiver about the future of the confederation, has started to wear a droopy look. It has been having trouble both at home and abroad.

THE TIMES WEDNESDAY JULY 6 1983

The just concluded visit to Paris of Mr René Lévesque, Premier of the mostly French-speaking province of six million, was a partial success at best, though Mr Lévesque pro-nounced himself very pleased

His main achievement was getting a letter of intent from a French Government-owned corporation to construct a huge Can $1,500m (£800m) alu Rivières on the St Lawrence River. Details still have to be worked out and a formal agreement signed before the plant becomes a reality.

In political terms, the trip came close to disaster. Mr Lévesque hoped to use it to mobilize French support for Quebec independence, but found the Mitterrand Government mwilling to antagonize Canada.
"Our ally and long-time friend," as M Pierre Mauroy, the French Prime Minister, calls it. The Metterrand administration displayed less interest in pro-moting Quebec sovereignty than any French government since the time of President de Gaulle. The French Government refused to back Quebec's de-mand for separate states in the # Eight million smokers decide it's better to kick the habit than kick the bucket.

The latest Government figures, published yesterday, show another dramatic fall in the number of smokers.

They are now very much in a minority.

Best of all, they've substantially lowered their risk of getting bronchitis, emphysema, cancer of the lung and heart disease.

They're free of the habit and its consequences.

But if the battle is being won, the war is far from over.

Smoking still kills 250 people a day.

In a year, it's responsible for eight times more deaths than road accidents.

Indeed, Fanny and Alexander pos-

For those who have followed the director's career, this film - so rich in allusions to previous works - provides his imagination, more than a familiar a kind of index to his entire body of work. And yet it is also more accessible, more straightforward in narrative and form, than many of his earlier films.

Bergman and Ingrid, his wife of 12 years, live far from the modern, planned communities of suburban Sweden, far from the conveniences of mass transportation.

To get to Faro, one must first fly from Stockholm to Visby, an ancient walled city of medieval churches and structure that stands perched like a lighthouse on the edge of the sea.

The same colour as the shale stones that cover the beach, the house seems summation of his work. All the the wall-to-wall carpeting and sleek Scandinavian modern furniture lend a sense of happy, if somewhat contrived, normality and cheer. There are crayon drawings by Bergman's grandchildren on the study wall, and stacks of family photo-albums on the table. The prevailing impression is that of a pleasant, middle-class model home; only the room of screening equipment and an opulent television set hint that the house belongs to a film director.

Dressed in an old flannel shirt, a worn cardigan and a little red woollen ski hat, Bergman might at first glance, one of the island's farmers. Alternately animated and introspec-tive, he speaks English slowly, cautiously, but becomes enthusiastic when showing a visitor around his grounds.

One has the sense that this is learnt behaviour of sorts - the gestures of a lonely and self-preoccupied man who wants very much to be liked, a man who has worked with actors all his life and who is keenly aware of the masks we put on in public life.

Beneath the bluff exterior, in fact, lies a wealth of contradictions. curiously palpable and accessible. It shaped his imagination, he says, and, for him, the past is always present. While he leared his stern, authoritarian father, a Lutheran minister, he clearly adored his mother.

Berries and sour milk for lunch and Dallas at night

Bergman's daily schedule seems equally well ordered, if not a bit fanatical in its precision. He gets up every morning at eight and writes from 9am until noon, Lunch - which for the past 15 years or so has consisted of berries and sour milk – is followed by two more hours of work and a nap at 3pm. Before dinner, he takes a walk and after dinner watches television he is especially fond of Dallas - or a movie from his large 16mm collection.

Even if Fanny and Alexander is his last feature film, Bergmann hardly plans to abandon his hectic schedule. He will continue to work for television - the medium that originally produced Scenes from a Marriage and Face to

Since the beginning, alongside his more public career in film, Bergman has maintained another one in the theatre. He will continue to stage operas and plays. He has adapted Molière's School for Wives for television, and plans to stage King Lear for Stockholm's Royal Dramatic Theatre.

It was during a rehearsal of Strindberg's Dance of Death there in 1976 that Bergman was arrested, in a highly publicized incident, for tax evasion. The charges were later dropped - the Swedish Government subsequently issued a formal apology but the director exiled himself from Sweden and moved to Munich.

At the time, the experience caused Bergman enormous traums, leading to a nervous breakdown. It not only seemed a fulfilment of all his worst fears of humilitation, but it also meant leaving the country he loved, although he did visit Farô from time to time.

Although he had made a pleasant enough life for himself in Munich, Bergman desperately missed his home. One summer day in 1977, he remembered how the lilacs in his garden used to explode into blossom during that week in June. The same evening, he and his wife took a plane to Visby, then drove a car back to their house on Faro. "The night was clear", he recalls. "And there was no darkness, and we got here at midnight and were sitting outside the old house, looking and smelling the flowers. The next day we went back to Munich. That in a way is very strange, but somehow very Swedish."

his time away from Sweden was a dramatic gesture. He gradually spent more and more time on Fáro, and is spending his entire summers again on the island. After fulfilling some theatre commitments in Munich, he says he will return to Sweden for good, "For a long time. I didn't want to come home", he says. "But now in a few years I think I will return. I think it's time for Ingmar to go home."

stances and up to maximum prescribed levels.

The Bar's fears that this is only the aip of the iceberg appear well-found-ed. Officials in the Lord Chancellor's Department say that so far, there have only been "preliminary skirmishes". Negotiations are now to get properly under way so that they can look at standard fees, or hourly rates, for work in jury trials. The Bar is strongly opposed to this, arguing it would alter its fundamental nature as independent practitioners doing piece-work. Officials also want letails of the rationale for a barrister's pay, such as his overheads and time spent on a case.

All this is a far cry from the lawyers' own remedy for control, Mr David Edwards, in charge of the running of civil legal aid, says it is no use looking at legal aid alone as it is an appendage of the legal system. He and others argue that delays in reform of the system, lack of control and waste all stem from the present split responsibility of the legal system between the Home Office (criminal procedure and magistrates' courts) and the Lord Chancellor's Department (all other courts). The latter pays the piper but does not call the tune," he says.

There is now growing support for the legal system to come under one department, namely that of the Lord Chancellor. Constitutionally, Mr Edwards says, it is wrong for Home Office, which is in charge of the police who prosecute, also to have control of the courts. "In my experince," said my friend Barlow, "BBC commentators don't know what they're talking about."

We were watching Wimbledon at the time. Some over-trained athlete had just leapt in the air, blonde hair quivering, and batted the ball down across the net so fast that no line judge had had time to fault it.
"A backhand slam, probably the most

"A backland siam, probably the most difficult shot in tennis," said the purring BBC-2 voice. Then Barlow had made his remark. Then we beged him to elucidate.

"The most difficult shot in tennis," said Barlow, "is the underarm right-hand volley between the legs, undertaken while you are holding a wine list in the left hand and endeavorage to select a vintee. endeavouring to select a vintage.

The last and indeed the only time I played this shot was in 1963 at Cannes, at a little restaurant called Jojo's, which only had about six tables but which oddly had its own tennis court. I was in the mixed doubles. It was not an ordinary mixed doubles, as I was playing with another man against two English girls."

A bit unfair, we commented. "It certainly was," reminisced Barlow, "We were 1-6, 3-6, 3-5 down in the third set. At that moment the waiter came out to say that our table was ready, and asked me to select a wine. No sooner had I taken the wine list than the ball came flying at me, my partner yelled "Yours!" and I excuted the shot I have already described." With what results? we enquired. "Good and bad. Good, in that it was a winner, the tide of the game turned and we won in five sets. Bad, in that the wine I chose turned out to a very ordinary Fleuric and the chief had gone home before we

Any further questions were superseded by a commotion from the TV. One player had landed a ball near the line, and the other had told the umpire that if he did not change his decision, he would disembowel him. "This is a call that will be talked about for a many a long year," said the BBC-2

"In my experience," said Barlow, "one line call is ever talked about for more than five minutes afterwards. The only exception I know to that was a line call which was made in the Nairobi Open in 1959 and is still furiously discussed in parts of

We begged him to tell us more.
"One of the finalists was Simon Edgeworth, an absolute cad but a fine player. His opponent was some health fitness fanatic doctor from Scotland. Well, the Scot hit a deep shot down the line to him in the final set which Simon couldn't reach, so be calsely took hold of the line -we used real lines, not chalk - and pulled it towards him, so the ball went out, not in."

towards him, so the ball went out, not in."

Was this not against the rules?

"Oddly, no. When the rules had been made, they hadn't bargained for people like Simon. He got the point, later the match, and later still the Scots' doctor's wife. Kenya was a bit like that, you know. Finally, the doctor strangled Simon one night. With the same line, curiously enough. That's why they still talk about it."

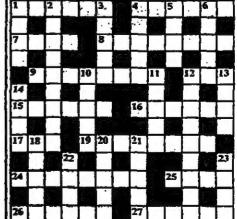

"My goodness!" interrupted BBC-2. "Has anyone ever seen two chaps throw themselves about on a tennis court like this nair?" There were obligatory shots of two men lying prope on the turf.

"I have, as a matter of fact," said Barlow." Did I ever tell you of the time I was involved in the All-Jersey Champion-ships, in 1968? There were two chaps against us in the doubles who chased for everything, as if possessed. Finally they both made a dash for one angled slam going way out of court, and crashed into the bushes. Not knowing the local geography, they did not realize it was a diff-top court and both tragically fell 300 feet. But, and this was the extraordinary thing, one of them managed to hit the ball

With what result? we asked breathless. "The ball came back on our side and roved a winner. It had been match point to them so of course they won. It is the only tennis title that has ever been won

We looked at each other silently. Then we leapt on Barlow and tied and gagged him so we could watch the TV more comfortably.

Legal aid Part 3: Frances Gibb reports on radical and controversial reforms

Justice, but at what price?

Radical reforms are now being made by the Government in an effort to curb and control the escalating costs of civil and criminal legal aid and remove some of the system's anomalies. On the criminal side the Legal Aid Act was passed last year. providing for a number of important changes, details of which are being hammered out. Among them is the "right of review" of a refusal of legal aid, the absence of which has been called a blot on the legal aid scheme; the only national social service without such a right.

That, it is hoped, will counteract the disparities between courts in granting aid. Justices' clerks are to be given the power to refuse aid as well as grant it. An appeal against their decision can then be made to a panel of lawyers, the local legal aid

Second, and more controversial, the act will change the way defendants pay contributions and the amounts they pay, increasing the amount of people paying towards their criminal costs from 7 per cent to anything up to 15 per cent and doubling from £2m to £4m the income derived from them.

In place of the court's discretion there will be new scales of contribution. A stricter means test will apply, like that in civil legal aid, with the spouses' income jointly assessed. The will be no upper limit however. The Government estimates that a defendant earning £92 a week, without savings, may have to pay £5 a week while a married man with two children on £156 could pay £3.

But the scheme has been fiercly attacked by some lawyers, notably the Legal Action Group, which says it will deter defence from seeking legal representation and mean wives paying for husbands accused of crime out of their earning, savings and child benefit allowances.

The Government is also to tackle what one MP called the "massive haemorrhage" on criminal legal aid: the huge costs in cases, such as largescale fraud, where defendants can afford to pay. It is proposing that courts employ a special examiner in such cases to make a detailed scrutiny of a defendant's finanances. But none of these reforms reaches the heart of the problem too many cases going to the crown courts.

There is wide support for bringing in section 48 of the Criminal Law Act 1977, which would oblige the prosecution to disclose its case to the defence before trial at magistrates' courts, as at crown courts. Many defendants, it is believed, would then not press for jury trial. The police have been accused of digging in their heels over this unimplemented measure as being too-consuming. But Mr Tony Judge, of the Police Federation, says most would wel-come it. "No less than £25m (more than one third) of criminal legal aid was spent in 1981 on defendants electing crown court trial and then changing pleas", he says. On the civil front, the need for all legal aid applications to go to the Department of Health and Social Security for means testing is being reviewed. There is also support from the Legal Aid Advisory Committee and the Law Society for "concili-ation" procedures to be made an integral part of early proceedings, so that more issues are settled out of court, thus cutting the matrimonial legal aid bill. But it is over payments to lawyers that some of the biggest reforms are proposed. Abuse and waste in the legal aid system inevitably draws attention to the few incompetent or corrupt lawyers and away from those dedicated to the scheme, who resent that their work has to be subsidized by private practice because of the low rates of pay.

The 3,000-member Legal Aid

Practitioners' Group is concerned about the effects of the Treasury's "increasingly harsh and restrictive policy towards the total sums involved in the legal aid system. Mr Quintin Barry, the chairman, says that although it has always been accepted there would be a disparity between private and state work, pay levels are now "insultingly low deterring lawyers from doing legal aid at all and creating "larger and larger areas of anmet need".

Another body, the Legal Action Group, says that instead of diluting the total amount of legal aid money with a flat rate payment to all lawyers, there should be proper pay and incentives for those few firms who do a substantial amount of legal aid work. The government, however wants tighter control across the board and has just brought in important changes in pay for criminal work. For solicitors there will be fixed criteria, set by the Lord Chancellor's Department, for hourly rates of pay in determined to reopen the issue."

Consider, for instance, if the daughter had had a very serious physical illness, had had an operation say, and was hovering between life and death - would not the mother have been by her bedside? Would not the members of the family set up a rota taking turns at keeping a vigil? And the same can be asked of the hospital staff. Would they not also have kept constant watch on such a patient? Would they have allowed a patient in physical danger of dying outside hospital to discharge herself? And if the rules forced them to, would they in that case not have warned someone? I think it is clear that all of us must learn to regard mental illness in the same serious way as we approach

Personally, I am surprised the carinon balls are interested in Mr Heaseman; he looks - I suppose I ought to say looked - like one of those Pelham Puppets of yore, a jangle of string and bone which might clatter to the ground at any moment. Hardly, I would have thought, an embellishment to the stock pots of the Dark Continent,

That frightful period when she was going to live in The Waterman's Arms with David and Charlotte's father is firmly in the past, and I would no more touch on the subject than I would foot-fault McEnroe. He always looks incandescent with rage. One day I shall muster the courage to beard him on Pesthouse Common and tell him my children are being well flogged at Mr Creakle's and that the liogea at Mr Creakie's and that the diet promises to make them bowed and rickety enough to enter a career in the chimneys of the gentry at an early date; only he would probably beam back in approval. A change of plan: Play School has lost its lure. Instead; my daughter will live with that nice white-haired old man on TV". On closer questioning this turns out to be Michael Foot. I always thought he lived in Hampstead; but no - he occupies The White House, near Twickenham Bridge, and is the resident of America. I point out that by the time she attains her majority Mr Foot will be 83, but she gives me a look that speaks volumes about the older man. Where have I gone wrong, and what will Jill Craigie make of it? Must I brace myself for an octogenerian son-in-law?

I had resolved not to mention Petranella and her family after that frightful fire in their uninsured roof a week ago, but once more schadenfreude has got the better of me. talks to Ruth self-made woman

When you are invited to interview Ruth Harris, the American novelist, her publicity people don't leave anything to chance. They send you a printed sheet containing Mrs. Harris's views on all the fashionable women't subjects you could nossibly women's subjects you could possibly wish to discuss with her, plus the ones you might forget.

Normally, you'd chuck this away, since a nugget of fact or character or scandal mined from a hard-worked interview is worth a dozen handouts. But not in this case. After reading Ruth Harris on women and money (precis: "Why don't women feel easy with money - earning it, using it, investing it? It seems to me that while sex has come out of the closet, money is still considered dirty, not nice to talk about ...") on having it all (precis: "For the last few years we've had gurus telling us to look out for number one, to lie, connive and walk allover everyone clese to get ours. It's offensive because total selfishness is repugnant and it's lousy advice because you make a lot of enemies. Who wants to end up alone at the top? The me-first gurus could use a dose of self-confidence and generosity all of which nice people already have) on role models (precis: "I personally would like role models I can relate to and Mary Wells, Chairman of Wells Rich Greene Inc. isn't it. The so-called role models the media shove at us are really like movie stars. I know damn well I'm dead if I try to look like Sophia Loren. If I try to look like Ruth Harris on a good day, then I have a chance...) and on much, much more, I felt as though Moses bad personally passed me the tablets and

I'd agreed with every one. She looked like Ruth Harris on a good day when I met her at the Ritz in Piccadilly with her husband, Michael (he is a publicist and writes books, too) wearing a bright, red dress and the happy expression of someone about to indulge two passions. Ruth and Michael Harris live in apartment on 71st Street, Manhattan, with a bedroom, a living room and his and her studies, "We used to have a weekend place in the country, but I couldn't keep track of two refrigerators". They are happy because they share the same interests in travel and food and friends and movies and off-off-Broadway shows and just wandering around New York looking at life. An American magazine once ran a feature on them called The Twenty Four Hour Marriage. "We were photographed working together, going to the gym together, having together and going out to the movies together," Michael says. "The result, of course, was that everyone bated us, it all seemed so saccharine sweet". And Ruth says: "I just hope nobody tried actually doing it, that's all". In fact, they keep office hours, meeting occasionally for hunch and when Ruth gets into the tense, middle draft stage of a novel she works 18 hours a day, seven days a week and because Michael is also a writer he understands this heavy typewriter duty. Her books sell over a million copies a time in the States and she is often compared to Susann or Robbins. Wrongly, since they deal with fantasy and a Ruth Harris novel is firmly based on fact. "I am absolutely lascinated by other people, by their lives, what happens to them and why", she says. "I am prepared to listen to anybody's life story and consider myself the ideal person to sit next to on a long plane

Her latest novel, A Self-Made Woman, is the result of an old friend calling her up, in tears, and saying know what to do. She's only 22 and I keep telling her that she must get more established in her career before she even thinks of marriage. But you know how kids are, they don't listen".

Ruth says: "When she's stopped crying, I said to her: 'Does it occur to you that we've come 180 degrees from when we were Julie's age and a mother was more likely to weep over a daughter who hadn't married and settled down by the time she was "In America, lifestyles are packaged and sold like toothpaste and my friend and her daughter, have both been seduced by the myths of their generations. The mother defined herself as one man's daughter, another man's wife and somebody else's mother. Her heriones were the ladylike Grace Kelly or the girl-next-door Doris Day, her thinking was shaped by home-making magazines and romantic fiction, she was left adrift in a man's world without benefit of map or compass. The daughter come of age in the generation of women, her beroines were Gloria Steinem and Jane Fonda, she read Ms and Savry, she lived with her boyfriend for years before she married him and she took it for granted she could and would have it all marriage, career, children, success, love and work".

The book tells how both women realize they've been sold a lie and learn the truth about themselves, become self-made. Ruth Harris is wary of her title: "It's a gradual process that happens over the years". She is however, willing to pass on a couple of tips that help the process along. "Look at what you do it and do more of it. It may mean thinking back to the subject in which you were successful at school, or the thing everyone always compliments you on. My heroine, for instance, was a good cook and she eventually helpful idea is to look at something about yourself you don't like and change it. If you're habitually late, try arriving on time and if you've been complaining about an extra 10lbs, lose it.

Ruth Harris has cleverly dissected two generations of women in her books, so how does she see the new woman shaping up, the class of '87 or so? She hears, she says, worrying rumours from the suburbs that girls spend all their time talking about love and boys and rings. "But I don't know. Really, I'm not a prophet. I have a hard enough time being a novelist."

Taxing times for married women

FIRST:

I recently received a missive from the taxman. If you are a married woman, it said, please reply as if you were your husband. I asked the Inland Revenue for en-lightenment. "Well". explained an embarrassed official, anticipating feminist wrath, "hus-bands are still legally responsible for their wives' tax affairs. Two or three years ago we would have asked you to give him the form to fill in. Now we let you answer questions on his behalf. That's progress". I like the tale I heard recently about the widow who received the same Inland Revenue form. She replied:

have cost me dear. For years my husband begged the taxman to let me handle my own affairs instead of pestering him. When the Inland Revenue finally sent a massive demand plus a letter accusing him of fraud and everything else short of high treason, I finally caved in, paying a large penalty along with the Letting wives be responsible for themselves and taxed as single people might seem simple. But in the two and a half years since the Government published a report on the topic the arguments have slogged back and forth like a baseline rally. What should be done about the married man's allowance? Is it an outdated state subsidy to the non-carning wife? Why should the working couple claim both it and the wife's own allowance, too? Should it be replaced by higher child benefits? Should the non-earning (I did not

My battles with the tax system say non-working) wife be able to transfer her own allowance to her husband? No two women, it seems can

No two women, it seems can agree on the subject, which is probably why we have had such a dotty and demeaning tax system for so long. Even God has his corner to fight. I received a letter from a vicar reprimanding me for suggesting that husbands and wives should be treated like single people for tax purposes. It undermined the spirit of Christian marriage.

What undermined it rather more, I suggested, was the present practice of taxing married couples jointly on their investment income, which resulted in much higher rates of tax. Was he aware that accountants advise their well-heeled clients to It is really not surprising that Sir

Geoffrey Howe, in whose in-tray the matter has lain all this time, has legged it from the Exchequer to the Foreign Office at the first decent opportunity. But clearly married women must keep a beady eye on the politicians. The new chancellor has already been advised by Mr Ronald Butt, in last week's Sunday Times, that his first economic priority is to change the tax system so married women are encouraged to stay at home to look after their families. Not that tax appears to have anything to do with the deplorable desire of married women to work. If it did, all the husbands would be lounging around at home sending their wives off in the morning for one of the cuter little tax anomolies is that the working wife supporting her husband gets more tax allowances than the working husband supporting his

The tax system is full of sexist variations, mostly operating against women. A husband can employ his hamfisted spouse for "secretarial services" - one of the better tax dodges. But a wife might have trouble persuading the Inland Revenue that her househusband was doing the typing.

The real problem is that we regard domestic labour as something that comes, or is given, free.

A businessman who would probably faint at the thought but the Wages for Housework campaign wrote to the Financial Times recently suggesting that employers should pay their employees' wives part of their husbands' salaries, recognizing that the poor chaps could not function without housewifely support. Us married women would then, of course, stop being goods and chattels and become zero-rated VAT tax losses instead. That's pro-

Rearguard action

The Labour Party hopes to have four or five GLC by-elections this autumn which it will use to embarrass the Government over plans for the GLCs abolition. Among those who may stand down are the two GLC members recently elected to Parliament: Labour's Tony Banks, and the Conservative Marion Roe. There is no formal rule about GLC members who are also MPs, but hitherto parliamentary duties have taken precedence. The Strongbridge Housing Association scandal may produce further electoral casualties. Geoffrey Seaton, Conservative member for Surbiton, has already resigned after criticism of his role. Two other Conserva-tives, Harold Mote and Peter Black, have resigned their party whip and are under pressure from colleagues to leave the council. Labour would relish the by-election opportunities though the four Conservatives all represent safe seats.

It is discomforting to hear that Dennis Buisson, one of two British birdwatchers arrested in Turkey for taking photographs in a military zone, will stand trial today without the pills urgently needed to control his gout. He was arrested five weeks ago. His wife arranged to have the pills forwarded by the Foreign Office and she sent them a month ago. The pills were still there yesterday. The Foreign Office has apologized, and promises they will now leave today.

The Tokyo pushers, who shove commuters into rush-hour trains, have lost. Though official figures service, for example, the average load factor in each trian's ten carriages during peak hours is 274 per cent, the pushers cannot squeeze any more in. Happily Japan National Railways is cutting its freight train service in and around Tokyo. So now commuters will be put on to the freight network.

So far Moscow has been saved from the consequences of its economic failure by the depression in the West. But being a good Marxist, Mr Andropov knows that capitalism runs in cycles and that what has gone down is likely to come up. No such rosy prospect faces the communist countries. Moreover, a growth in the gap etween East and West could have serious internal repercussions for the Soviet Union. It would undermine the idea of the communist countries' inevitable ultimate victory, and so cast doubt on the central doctrine of Soviet foreign policy: that all Soviet gains, once completed, are irrevresible. Something urgently needs to be done to improve the Soviet bloc's economic performance. Economists from the smaller East European countries generally believe in the need for reforms that would introduce more market elements into the centrally planned economics. They are divided, however, on whether this can be done without far-reaching democratization.

Some believe that the introduction of market forces is fully compatible with the maintenance of political dictatorship. State-owned firms would compete in domestic and international markets, trying to maximze profits - and their managers' bonuses. Discipline would be maintained by the secret police and, it is sometimes admitted in private, by fear of the unemployment that the reforms would bring.

The Times Portrait: the Aga Khan

Workboy of the racing world

The name of the Aga Khan conjures up a jet-set image of race-horses, private yachts and planes, nightclub private yachts and planes, highicith parties with film stars and royalty and wealth beyond the bounds of imagination. Is he not — it is believed — given his weight in gold by the Ismaili community, of which he is the spiritual head? The saga over the kidnapping of Shergar, twice winner of the Derby and former star of the Aga Khan's private stables, has only added to the image of mystery and glamour.

The Aga Khan, now in Britain for the community collection of Islamic community celebrations of his silver jubilee, does not care for the image. Nor does it fit the impression he gives of an intelligent, soft-spoken, surprisingly unassuming and courteous man in his mid-forties. Slightly balding, tending to portliness, his main interests appear to be his extensive Third World activities, rather than jet-setting. "He is not even good at small talk", one of his close aides said.

"He prefers to get straight into serious conversation. He is basically rather an intense person, with an inquiring mind and a natural interest in what's going on in the world. He reads the newspapers avidly. His leisure time is in inverted commas. I have never seen anyone work so hard, and he expects the same standards of all his staff. His work is his life. He does have his own plane, but it's very much a mobile office. His wife usually accompanies him on all his trips. He is a devoted family man."

Prince Karim Aga Khan was 20 and a student at Harvard when his grandfather, Sir Sultan Mahomed Shah Aga Khan, died on July 11. 1957, and he became the forty-ninth Imam of the Shia Ismailis, a widely dispersed Muslim sect of some 15 million people of diverse languages living mainly in Asia, East Africa and the Middle East. There are some also in the West, notably in Britain. Canada and the United States. Despite their disparateness, the Ismailis remain bound by their faith and by their loyalty to their hereditary Imam, who is reputedly a direct descendant of the Prophet Muhammad through the Prophet's cousin, Ali, who married Muham-mad's daughter, Fatima. The old Aga Khan had "reigned" for 72 years, living first in India and then moving in 1898 to Geneva. His eldest son by his Italian first wife was Prince Aly Khan, of whom his father complained that he cared only for "fast horses and fast women" Aly was by-passed in the succession to the Imamat, the old Aga Khan explaining in his will that he wished 10 be succeeded "by a young man brought up in the midst of the new Harvard in 1959. He returned to live in Geneva, where the headquarters of many of his grandfather's Third World activities were based, to pursue his skiing interests (he was captain of the Iranian Olympic ski team). In 1976 he moved to France and now lives with his wife and three children in a house set in beautifully landscaped grounds at Gouvieux, about an hour's drive north of Paris, not far from the Chantilly racecourse.

His headquarters building in the grounds is staffed by a personal secretariat of 100 people of 18 different nationalities (only about a quarter are Ismailis) who oversee and coordinate his activities. These include the Aga Khan Foundation, set up in 1967 as a non-profit making organization funding education, health, and rural development programmes, mainly in de-veloping countries in Asia and Africa: Industrial Promotion Services (IPS), a group of private companies set up in 1963 to act as a catalyst to local development; the Aga Khan Awards Foundation, set up in 1978 to encourage exceptional achievements in arts and sciences in a Muslim context, with a triennia $500,000 prize for architecture as its first award; and the Aga Khan University, the founding of which has been the highlight of the Aga Khan's year-long jubilee celebrations, which officially come to an end next Monday. an end next Monday.

There are also the Aga Khan's two purely private ventures: his stables reputedly the largest in the world.

Nairobi, Prince Karim attended Le Rosey School in Switzerland and took a degree in Islamic history at Sardinia. After more than 10 years of wrangling, the Aga Khan has just of wrangling, the Aga Khan has just got the go-ahead from the Sardinian authorities for a further 1,000 billion lira (£400m) project which is designed to quadruple the number of hotel beds to 60,000 over the next

> The Aga Khan is president and the original moving light of the consortium behind the Costa Smeraida development, which has been much criticized by local environmentalists for destroying an area of natural beauty and for catering only for the rich. The Aga Khan replies that his interest in providing carefully planned, high-quality development in the area was in large part prompted by a desire to save its great beauty from the ravages of the ad-hoc tourist developments that have ruined other parts of Italy and the Mediterranean coast. The tourism projects that he is now carrying out in Third World countries under the auspices of IPS is based on much the same concept. IPS has launched more than 100 enterprises, ranging from the manufacture of soap and women's tights to mining and financial projects, which provide jobs for more than 10,000 people. Some are wholly owned by the Imamat but others are joint ventures, either with private companies or with international agencies such as the World Bank Although a private company, the aim of IPS is not short-term profit but rather to provide impetus for new development and jobs, with the intention that the venture should become self-sufficient in the long-which at present comprise 450 The ultra-modern 720-bed teach-horses; and the constroversial Costa ing hospital in Karachi, which will

Many of the Imamat's health and educational services, which now include more than 200 health centres and hospitals and some 300 schools, were set up by the present Aga Khan's grandfather, using the proceeds of the "weighings" of his olden, diamond, and platinum jubilees. On these occasions, the Ismaili community did indeed weigh their Imam in gold, diamonds and platinum respectively, but that practice stopped when Prince Karim became Aga Khan, and there is no intention of reviving it.

When at his headquarters at Gouvieux, the Aga Khan normally works a basic 11-hour day from 9 am until 8 pm, often eating in the canteen with his staff. But in crises, which are not infrequent, he may be working from 4 am straight through until 2 am the next morning. His yacht and his skiing are his only two real forms of relaxation, and even then he will spend part of the day

One of the most impressive features of the Imamat's activities is the extraordinary willingness of Ismailis, many not at all well-off, to devote their time and their money to the welfare not just of other Ismailis but of the whole local community in which they usually form only a tiny minority. The Aga Khan services are open to all regardless of race or creed. In Kenya, for example, non-Ismailis account for 95 per cent of the bed occupancy in Ismaili-funded hospitals and 70 per cent of the tribe or ethnic body is serving its interests in the developing world by becoming inward looking, the Aga Khan explains. "The sooner independent states are able to work together, to become nations and to think as nations, with people of diverse backgrounds, languages, and religious practices, the more stable those countries will become and the sounder the base for a democratic process. To create a sense of nationhood is one of my priority objectives,

There is little doubt about his organizational ability and business scumen, but what about his primary role as spiritual head of the Ismail community? He smiles. He knows that it is often hard for Christians to understand how private enterprise fits in with that role. Islam is an allencompassing faith, he explains, giving direction to every aspect of an individual's life. It urges the individual to lead a balanced life, one that strives to accommodate both material progress and spiritual well-being. But no one could hope to achieve that balance in sickness illiteracy or squalor. As leader of the Ismaili community, he believes that it is his duty to provide the basic health and education that are crucial to mankind's self-realization and spiritual growth. He agreed that he did not talk much about spiritual matters to western audiences; more, perhaps, to Muslim audiences. But that did not mean that it was not a dominant force in all that he did. "My life would be meaningless without my faith," he insists. "But I am not sure that a religious leader should talk exclusively about matters of faith. Faith should be demonstrated through actions."

But the big scene was the Return, with everyone's eyes turned piously up in devout rejoicing, and the elder brother nowhere in sight, presumably still out in the field, but about to be consumed with rage and envy. The Return is the thing that sticks in the mind about the Prodigal.

Here is a recent example of the confusion, from an article in The Sunday Times about Essential Cubism exhibition at the Tate. The piece opened with a paragraph about Douglas Cooper, the organizer of the exhibition. Cooper, we are told, born and brought up in England, has lived all the rest of his life in exile: "So his homecoming is a truly prodigal occasion." This might just conceivably refer to the costs of mounting the exhibition, not to mention the cost of the catalogue. But I think not. It is a choice example of the new use of prodigal to mean "returning home after long 'Prodigal" was a favourite word Shakespeare had a curious trick of hypallage with "prodigal", transferring it from its appropriate noun to another to which it did not properly belong, as worsened vogue in "2 restless night", "the con-

The right time for fixing what MPs should be paid is immediately before an election. Then candidates could face their voters with a frank prospectus. Parliament would have just decided that the rate for the job was £15,000 a year - or £50,000 or £5.000 - and they could defend that rate or even, if they felt obliged to, pledge themselves as individuals to take something less (or to demand something more). Indeed a legal obligation could be placed on every Parliament, before it was dissolved, to pick the rate for its successor.

Meanwhile the Cabinet should stick to its guns on the current wage claim. It might well be beaten; that is Parliament's sovereign right. But it would be better by far for Parliament to impose a rate for its service in defiance of what the Government thought appropriate, than for the Government to negotiate a rate it was known to think inappropriate, and to take responsibility for its acceptance. # Why the police need policing

Sir Kenneth Newman, the Metro-politan Police Commissioner, whose some degree; 53 per cent said the political comments", is no stranger to political controversy.

Last year, he caused a storm by remarks he is allegded to have about the Jamaican community in an interview with the American journal, Police Magazine. "In the Jamaicans, you have people who are constitutionally disorderly. . . it's simply in their makeup," it quoted him as saying "They are constitutionally disposed to be anti-authority." Though Newman subsequently denied that he had ever made these remarks, his interviewer. Bruce Porter, is adamant that he did and that he took detailed notes at the time to prove it. Porter, a director of the journalism programme at Brooklyn College, New York, and a former urban editor of Newsweek, is respected as a journalist-academic. If wires were crossed on that occasion, as Sir Kenneth Newman now maintains, there is no dispute about what he said last week. What is open to exception, however, is not so much the spontaneous remarks that he made at the press conference which provoked such a public furore as the new doctrine of lese-majeste that he outlines in his annual report.

Newman makes a crucial distinction in this report between "debate restricted to the objective ments of the proposals for change" in the police force, which is acceptable, and what he calls, revealingly, uneducated, criticism, which is not Indeed, in his view, "unedu-cated" and "unfair" critics who encourage negative attitudes towards the police are a destablizing influence and a threat to public order", and should therefore be regarded as enemies of the people.

This line of argument has a depressingly familiar ring. The view that only "objective" criticism is permissible is the cornerstone of all authoritarian systems of control, whether they be on the left or the right, which suppress free speech in the name of the public good. It is the rationale for silencing "unscientific" criticism in China, just as it is invoked to silence "anti-social" opinion in Chile. This logic also provides a convenient bolt-hole: negative attitudes are created by trouble-makers and require no further response except to deal with them. Nevertheless the Commissioner would be well-advised to consider more carefully evidence of public dissatisfaction with some aspects of the police. A national poll by NOP in October 1981 found that almost one in four people said their confidence in the police has decreased in recent years. A subsequent opinion poll of Londoners conducted by the Opinion Research Centre in October 1982 revealed still more critical attack on left-wing activists last average police officer was racially week was criticized by The Sunday Times as "misjudged" and denounced by the Shadow Home Sceretary. Roy Hattersley, as "wild people should not be dismissed as people should not be dismissed as the dupes of ultra-left propaganda: they are responding to aspects of the police force which are a genuine ground for concern and which call for constructive reform.

The Metropolitan Police Force has become increasingly divorced from the local population it serves. From being organized around beat patrols by constables with close links with the local community, the Met has become a motorized and highly mobile organization with a pro-fessional, technological support system without real local roots. In order to offset this distancing of the police from London's local com-munities, the Met should be subject to the democratic control of both the GLC and the local London boroughs.

Effective democratic accountability would provide a spur to a vigorous rooting out of any residual corruption in the police force. The remarkable World in Action programme last August, in which former chief constables of Dorset and Devon and Cornwall and a former inspector of constabulary all testified to the corruption in some parts of the London force, rather uncomfortably indicates that action against corruption has not been successfully concluded by the Countryman inquiry. A genuinely independent police ombudsman also needs to be established so that complaints against the police can be adequately dealt with.

Local authority control of the police would also help to improve the sometimes antagonistic relationship between the police and members of local ethnic communities. Though the causes of this antagonism are complex, the experience of living in Brixton for most of the last seven years convinces me that one contributory factor is the openly racist attitude of some policemen. (As one officer told the man living in the flat below ours, in full earshot of neighbours "white trash and black scum - thats' all who live round here.") The Home Office should also belatedly accept the Scarman recommendation that racist behaviour be made an offence under the police discipline code.

Of course, many of London's policemen are humane, caring and conscientiously neutral upholders of the law. They belong to a force that is inspired by a genuine sense of public service. But at a time when the policemen's job is being made increasingly difficult by the tensions caused by rising unemployment, a close relationship between the police and the public becomes all the more essential for the maintenance of law and justice. The development of this partnership was not best served by Sir Kenneth Newman's inflammatory political intervention last week. attitudes. A total of 87 per cent. # SCIENCE BASED SOCIETY ogical development are activiics specific to the mixed econmy. They form a context in which generalized debate about public versus private is at its east illuminating. If state agenries took over the whole reponsibility the effort would. nevitably lack applicability and profitability at the product end of the spectrum. If research were "privatized" wholesale most basic scientific research and much highly generalized applied science would cease to be done. it is too expensive and its utility is 100 remote or uncertain for it to be justifiable expenditure in a corporation geared to profit. Yet if product research is to maintain its fertility it has to be fed from research in basic science and generic technologies.

The state and private enterprise are very much in this thing together. The latest full set of figures is for 1978 (amazingly). Of the £3,500 million then spent on research and development the government provided about half.
Three quarters of that half, nearly one third of the total, was directed to defence. The value of the spin-off from defence to civil industry is much argued over. It may be noted that our three most formidable competitors among the industrialized nations of the free world, the United States, West Germany and Japan, all spent substantially more per head of population on civil research and development. The United Kingdom is an Scientific research and techno- (oil, the exception, being temporarily plentiful but finite). We stand at a time when the advent of several new technologies, of which micro-electronics is the most conspicuous, have already begun to revolutionize industrial society. These facts of our condition lay upon us a strict requirement to sustain an expanding effort in research and development all along the line from basic science to product design, and to acquire the habit of being receptive to its results.

Whether the effort is now large enough may be doubted after several years of public retrenchment and industrial recession, and when set beside that of other advanced industrial countries. It is also doubtful if the effort expended is as well directed as it could be. And it is certain that industry in its methods and its products is insufficiently receptive to the changes technological innovation dictates and the opportunities it offers.

The joint report by the chairmen of the Government's two princpal advisory bodies in this field reviews some of these matters. Its appearance in this form itself marks an improvement in as much as it offers for the first time joint consideration from the point of view of the research councils and from that of the administration of industrial R and D.

The report is excessively diplomatic in its comments on the setback to public science open trading nation of compara-tively meagre natural resources caused by the financial squeeze greater is the cost of misjudg-tively meagre natural resources on the universities from 1981. It was the boast of ministers that by maintaining the value of the Science Vote, from which the research councils receive their funds, they were protecting the output of research. In fact so interwoven are the research councils and the universities that the work of both was affected by the forced economies in university science. This report rightly lays emphasis on the need for stable long-term funding, and it is particularly disappointing that the universities were hit when the benefits of linking universities, government and industry in research and development programmes were coming to be recognized.

The report also dwells on the need for greater selectivity in committing the funds available. In pure and applied science the range is now so vast, the cost se high and velocity so great that choices must be made, some lines backed to the neglect of others, with the attendant risk of blunders and missed opportunities. In basic science these choices are left largely to the practitioners: the institutional arrangements may not be perfect but the choice is with the right people. Elsewhere in the research spectrum the question who is to make the choices of what to pursue and what to discontinue is less easy to answer and just as important to get right. Voices from the market place must be heard in the laboratory and vice versa; and the more narrowly resources are committed the

FROM MADRID TO BERNE

The Madrid conference is President, are in a very delicate drawing to a close in much the same way as it began long months ago in September 1980: with bitter disagreement on the question of human rights. Since party oligarchy. Having now the USSR has been violating the principles of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) from the very moment of signing the Helsinki Final Act in 1975, it might well be argued that further agreements will have equally little 1986. This would commit the impact, and that the Madrid USSR to return to the dock for follow-up meeting should have another embarrassing trial of its been abandoned long ago. This shameful record on human would be a mistake.

It would also be wrong, however, to permit the USSR to change the emphasis of the CSCE so that it became largely in the chairman's concluding a disarmament conference devoted to empty rhetoric on the desirability of peace. Yet disarmament talks deal with the results of East-West tensions. not their causes, while the issues debated so heatedly at Madrid go to the heart of the differences now dividing Europe: should the demands of a regime take priority over the rights of an individual citizen?

In an ideal society, conflicts between the state and the citizen are rare and are settled quickly by a fair compromise between treedom and obligation to society. Soviet delegates at Madrid, who include Igor Andropov, the son of the USSR position precisely because they represent not the wishes of the majority of their population, but rather the demands of a small accepted most of the Spanish proposals on human rights, they are still prolonging the proceedings by refusing to agree to a human contacts conference on family reunification and similar matters, to be held in Berne in

This is no mere quibble but an essential matter of gaining full recognition for the importance of the humanitarian clauses in "Basket Three" of the original

Without a formal agreement. there would be a strong risk that the USSR would refuse to attend the Berne meeting. This reluctance to discuss humanitarian issues has been the main obstacle to reaching a conclusion at Madrid. In March a draft. agreement prepared by the neutral countries at the thirtyfive nation talks was accepted by Nato members after the neutrals had allowed important amendments on human rights. The USSR denounced the amendments and told its allies to do likewise. In June, however, the Romanians accepted and, after the Spanish compromise proposals, the Hungarian and Polish governments indicated their willingness to sign. Last Friday the USSR finally declared itself ready to yield substantial ground, but held out against the Berne meeting.

The discussions causing the greatest trouble at Madrid have involved the principle of free flow of people and information. Moscow continues to jam those radio broadcasts from the West which the regime regards as "interference in Soviet internal affairs". A system based on censorship cannot allow alternative sources of information, nor can it allow its citizens to travel abroad. This is why the term "defection" is used to describe the decision of the violinist Viktoriya Mullova to live in the West - a decision already taken by thousands of Soviet citizens, ranging from outstanding musicians, dancers, writers and scientists to ordinary sailors: the one thing they all have in common is that they had an opportunity to opt out of the Soviet society, and seized it.

Soviet spokesmen can argue that their system has advantages such as freedom from unemployment, and that those who are educated at the expense of the community should repay it by remaining to contribute their talents, rather than seeking greater rewards elsewhere. But until the peoples under communist regimes have a greater say in their country's foreign and domestic affairs, dangerous East-West tensions will continue, That is why Western negotiators must persevere on the issue of human rights.

Parliamentary pay Implications in N Ireland of hanging and presumption

From Sir Woodrow Wyatt

Sir. I disagree with your leading article of July 4 on parliamentary pay. When I first went into Parliament in 1945 the MP's salary was £600 a year. There was no secretarial allowance, no living away from home allowance, no free travel for wives, no free telephone, though we did have a locker with a key to put our papers in. Yet many would argue that the quality of MPs in the 1945 Parliament was at least as good as that of those in the present Parliament, if not better.

Allowing for inflation, that £600 would today be £6,810. The present MP's salary is £14,510, to which must be added a living-away allowance of up to £5,674, a allowance of .np to 25,6/4, a secretarial allowance of up to £8,820, free telephones, and 15 free journeys for one's wife. Yet MPs, many of whom have only been in the job for three weeks, are now demanding up to a 30 per cent rise for a very part-time job.

The great Herbert Morrison used to maintain that MPs should have work outside the House to keep them in contact with what life is all about. He was right. Those who try to make the Commons a full-time job are revolving on their own axis.

The fight against inflation is far from over. That MPs should be demanding increases in November is grotesque. By 1945 standards they are handsomely paid already.

How can the Government exercise the vitally needed pay restraint if MPs set such a rotten example? They knew the pay and conditions

They knew the pay and conditions before they applied for the job and there are many thousands of equal, or better, quality willing to take their places if they now find they don't like them.

Sporting boycotts

From the Bishap of Liverpool

Sir, David Miller wrote in his two articles in The Times (June 8 and 9) that the sporting boycott has reached the absolute limit of its effectiveness and is about to become rapidly counterproductive. The evidence he quoted came from four Whites, four Coloureds, one Indian and one black South African. Like so many British sportsmen and businessmen he discussed with many more whites and coloured people rather than with black people themselves what would help the 75 per cent of South Africans who are black.

Mr Carlisle and the other MCC members, who are calling for an MCC team to go to South Africa. sporting contacts, have confirmed that full integration now exists both on and off the cricket field."

All my- contacts with South Africans during the last year lead me to believe that the changes which have taken place are very modest and do not affect the majority of black people. All the black South Africans I know have consistently asked for the sporting boycott to be maintained. Some have also pressed that there should be a trade boycott. Those who disagree with that on the grounds that black South Africans would be most hurt by it, have urged us to continue the sporting boycott.

I salute the courage of white sportsmen who have stood up on this issue. They know that making substantial progress will need long perseverance. I have to note that they have only stood up since the sporting boycott has been enforced. It should not be lifted until nonracial sport becomes normal at every level from schools upwards. Such sporting opportunities should not rest on someone's nod or good will but on firmly established rights.

Your Cricket Correspondent repeatedly suggests that it is only Third World political leaders who oppose the resumption of inter-national sport with South Africa. I must assure him that much responsible Christian leadership both inside and outside South Africa opposes it. For example, the Southern Africa Catholic Bishops' conference at the time of the 1981 Springboks' tour to New Zealand said that to lift the boycott would be to sacrifice one of the few peaceful levers for change in South African

I hope that members of the MCC will not ignore this on July 13. And I hope they will stand for a straightforward principle: the tradition of sport does not accept racial barriers. That's why sportsmen have refused to play against South Africa. That is why the pressure that the sporting boycott brings should be maintained

Sale of venison

From Dr John Fletcher

Sir, I believe that "the flavour associated with venison" referred to putrefaction. The red deer of Scotland which produce about 75 per cent of Britain's venison are culled when, by agricultural stancation of the hard-worked stalker.

From Professor Anthony Clare

Sir, Given the concise, persuasive sir, Given the concise, persuasive case argued (July 2) by Professor Beckett and his colleagues against capital punishment, with particular relevance to the Northern Ireland troubles, why is it that so many people believe that the reintroduction of hanging would be helpful? One problem appears to be that sane, sensible and moderate people who themselves love life and have no great desire to die have little difficulty imagining the deterrent potential of capital punishment These same people then conclude that the terrorist, being only human, shares their view of life and death.

But what makes today's heartless, humourless and pitiless political fanatic so dangerous is precisely the fact that he does not regard life and death in this way at all. Left out of this simple equation is his un-shakeable belief in the revolutionary cause and solution and if death itself is required to advance both, then so

Burton's tomb

From Mrs Rosalind Whitworth Sir, Last Sunday I paid a visit to Sir Richard Burton's famous tent tomb at St Mary Magdalene's church at Mortlake. This tomb, which, I understand, is still regularly visited, particularly in the summer months, stands in a very neglected church-yard, and is in itself hard to locate. At some later stage another burial has taken place at the rear, and this has to be negotiated in order to climb the iron stair to view the interior of the tomb, which is now unfortunately surrounded by underconsidering how unique this monument is, and the tributes that are being paid at the moment to this eminent anthropologist, it seems ironic that nobody has seen fit to maintain his exotic grave. Yours faithfully, ROSALIND WHITWORTH. 9 Tite Street, Chelsea, SW3.

It is to his eternal credit that Mr

Pym accepted the assigment at the most difficult time imaginable, even though the shrill style of Thatcher government must already have become abhorrent to him during his spell at Defence. In doing so he rightly put the nation's interests above considerations of personal incompatibility. As a complete outsider, I formed the impression that the Foreign Office which Mr Pym took over was a department so entranced by the supposed wizardry and charisma of Lord Carrington that it had almost forgotten its proper function. However, this and other inherited problems Mr Pym took in his stride, doing a sterling job for Britain in an unassuming, unpretentious, yet very effective way. And, invariably, he allowed the Prime Minister to take the credit for the fruits of his labours.

Yours faithfully. MICHAEL BAILEY, 48 Kingshill Park, Dursley, Gloucestershire.

The point I wish to make is that the flavour now associated with venison is a relatively recent one; it is not to everyone's taste and the younger, fresher product of the deer farm may paradoxically be the authentic taste enjoyed by our ancestors in the days when deer could be grown more quickly, and killed when younger, than is the case parks were commonplace. Sir, The public argument about new Labour peers is as confusing as it is unseemly. The Labour Party is committed to the abolition of the House of Lords on the ground that it has no necessary function to perform. This proposition has never enjoyed any real support among existing Labour peers, who are, of course, aware of the unique contri-bution to the government of the country made by the House of

Have the trade union leaders, who voted solidly for abolition, let it be known that they have been persuaded to the contrary view by the many ex-trade union leaders who, as peers, make such a valuable contribution to the work of the House of Lords?

If no such movement is afoot is the request to be interpreted as an attempt to increase the total number of votes in Parliament favouring abolition? Is that how the new Labour peers will be expected to act? The Trojan horse provides a clear precedent of great antiquity; but will they individually have both a clear view and a clear conscience as they take the oath before taking their Amid this welter of confusion it is fortunate that the duties of her Majesty's loyal Opposition in the Lords can safely be left to the Alliance peers, as was shown in the recent debate on the Queen's Speech. On that occasion, as the figures correctly reported by The Times demonstrated, the number of Liberal and SDP peers voting for the Alliance amendment exceeded the number of Labour peers voting for the Labour amendment by eight. By a strange coincidence that is exactly the number of new Labour peers being sought, according to latest reports.

US monetary policy

From Professor J. E. Meade, FBA Sir, In his article, "Debt: the cancer eating into the US economy" (June 22) Mr Congdon dramatically illustrates the horrific effect of a persistent budget deficit in con-ditions on which there is a high rate of interest. Compound interest on the national debt causes an explosive rise in the interest burden on the budget, and so in the budget deficit. and so in the national debt itself on which the interest is being com-

The cure, as Mr Congdon argues, calls for a reduction in the budget deficit. But it calls also for a reduction in the rate of interest. A less relaxed budgetary stance (for example, a reduction in current government expenditures) will in itself have a deflationary effect on the total money demand for goods and services; and this would make it possible to have a more relaxed monetary policy, with lower interest rates stimulating expenditures, with-out any net inflationary effect on total expenditures. Remedial action on the debt cancer would than rely on both blades of the surgeon's scissors: a smaller current deficit combined with a lower rate of interest on the national debt.

The US economy is sufficiently large for its policymakers to be able to choose an appropriate mix of fiscal and monetary policies. Unfortunately in an open economy smaller countries, such as the UK are not able to choose their own mix with such complete freedom since the international flow of capital funds will impose a serious strain on their balances of payments if they attempt by a more relaxed monetary policy to maintain interest rates much below those ruling in the USA. The choice of the appropriate mix of fiscal and monetary policies · in the USA is of crucial importance for the world economy. Yours faithfully,

Wayward water

From Professor Joseph Black

Sir. Mrs Speight (July 2) has described very accurately her observation of "two simultaneous small vortices, one clockwise and one anticlockwise, divided by a smooth flow of water". This effect was also observed by Leonardo and brilliantly illustrated by him in "Studies of water formation," drawing No 12660 (1507), Windsor Royal Library. This shows clearly a jet of water cascading down into water at rest, with the resulting two opposing circular motions.

Attractive though her deduction is that the Equator runs north and south through Berkshire, I am afraid that the explanation is much simpler. When a jet of water has to move within a body of water at rest, or in slower motion, there arises a shearing force acting along each boundary of the jet this force induces a rotating motion or vortices which act as "rollers".

Since these "rollers" are on opposite sides of the smooth flow of water they will naturally have to rotate one clockwise and one anti-Yours faithfully, JOSEPH BLACK.

INTRODUCTION

DPCE is a market leader in the independent maintenance of a wide range of computer systems requiring highly reliable and sophisticated servicing by engineers on site and/or on call, often on a 24 hours per day basis. It also provides a range of other engineering services to users of computer systems, including the sale of training programmes and equipment.

DPCE operates mainly in the UK and The Netherlands. In both countries its principal maintenance contracts are with leading national and international organisations whose extensive use of sophisticated computer hardware supplied by a number of manufacturers makes reliable servicing arrangements imperative.

The business carried on by DPCE originated with the formation in Australia in 1971 of Data Processing Customer Engineering Pty. Limited ("DPCE Pty."). In 1972 DPCE Pty. was acquired by Dier Computer Corporation Limited, an Australian leasing company, which in turn was acquired in 1977 by Datronics Corporation Limited, a company listed on the Sydney

DPCE Pty.'s first major contract, to maintain the terminal network for Ansett Airlines, was awarded in 1973. The following year it negotiated a long term contract to maintain the computer network installed on the central site of Qantas, the national airline of Anstralia. DPCE Pty. continued to expand in Australia, winning contracts from leading institutions including the Sydney Stock Exchange, Reader's Digest and the Australian Department of Social Security.

In 1976 DPCE Pty, won its first major overseas maintenance contract following an invitation from British Airways ("BA") to undertake a hardware andit at Heathrow, one of its two principal computer sites, and then to tender for the maintenance contracts for the sites both at Heathrow and at the West London Air Terminal. Having been awarded the contract, DPCE Pry. set up a UK division to provide the necessary maintenance services at the two sites, which of hardware manufactured by different companies.

From this demanding and exciting beginning, and with the introduction of a new management team in 1979, the UK division quickly expanded its customer base, signing contracts with, among others, British Telecom, University of Exeter and Coventry City Council. In 1980 DPCE won its first maintenance contract in The Netberlands, for KLM Royal Dutch Airlines N.V. ("KLM"). DPCE's rapid growth has resulted not only from the award of contracts by new customers but from increased levels of business with a number of existing customers. The table below demonstrates the growth of the business since 1st July, 1977:

. 1978 1979 1980 1981 1982 1983 Number of maintenance contracts 5 8 15 19 30 47 Turnover for year ended 30th June (£'000) 859 -1,089 1,574 2,537 3,636 5,450 1

In April, 1981 DPCE's management, together with a consortium of UK financial institutions led by Thompson Clive & Partners Limited and Candover Investments Limited, formed the Company to acquire DPCE (UK) Limited ("DPCE (UK)"), which comprised the UK and Netherlands activities of DPCE Pry.

BUSINESS Services offered

DPCE's principal activity is the provision of a maintenance service under contract to users of computer equipment, including central processing units, peripherals and distributed networks.

Over 90 per cent, of DPCE's revenue is derived from this source. DPCE has developed a concept of total systems maintenance whereby the service is structured to accommodate the specific needs of customers, to avoid the problems that frequently develop in mixed equipment installations, and to enable customers to obtain the maximum serviceable life from their computer systems. The directors believe that DPCE is the largest independent group outside North America according to the largest independent group outside North America providing a service of this nature.

DPCE provides extensive training facilities for its employees and has developed training programmes for sale to customers and equipment manufacturers. It sells computer equipment, Edge Franklig primarily to customers with maintenance contracts, and undertakes computer hardware audits which provide customers with advice on the serviceability and reliability of their existing

Contractual arrangements

DPCE obtains contracts either following negotiations with potential customers, or, in the case of government or quasi-governmental institutions, through competitive tender.

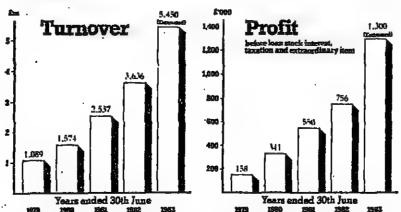

The duration of the contracts ranges from one to ten years but is typically for an initial period of between two and five years, continuing thereafter subject to a period of notice on either side. At 1st June, 1983 the total monthly charges receivable under maintenance contracts amounted to approximately £470,000. Of this total, 32 per cent, was in respect of contracts with over three years to run before the end of the initial period. The contracts stipulate the range and extent of the service and provide that DPCE's personnel will be available for specified periods of up to twenty-four hours per day, to provide both routine maintenance and emergency breakdown services. The contract charge, which generally includes the cost of all necessary spare parts, is subject to price escalation over the life of the contract, usually based on Government wage indices. Currently DPCE maintains equipment made by over 120 different manufacturers ranging from older generation machines such as the ICL System 4 to those incorporating the latest technology such as National Advanced Systems: NAS 9060 (Hitachi). The duration of the contracts ranges from one to ten years but is typically for an initial period

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

The following information is derived from the full text of the prospectus and accordingly must be read in conjunction with that text.

Business: DPCE is a market leader in the provision of manufacturer-independent computer maintenance services, primarily under contract, to leading national and international organisations. Its ancillary activities include training, hardware consultancy and supply of equipment. The Company has two operating subsidiaries, one in the United Kingdom and one in The Netherlands.

Suppliers In order to maintain supplies of the parts necessary to keep computer equipment fully operational, DPCE maintains tracing relationships with computer manufacturers, original equipment manufacturers, plug-compatible equipment manufacturers, component and subassembly manufacturers, and computer dealers and brokers. DPCE has access to suppliers not only in the UK and Europe, but also in the USA. As additional sources for parts, it purchases new and second-user equipment and refurbishes sub-assemblies.

The quality and sophistication of DPCE's maintenance service is such that its customers are principally major companies or public sector institutions which are heavy users of computer

The original BA contract, which at 1st June, 1983 was contributing about 28 per cent. of contracted revenue, was originally awarded for a period of three years, but was extended in October, 1978 for five years from that time, continuing thereafter subject to six months' notice on either side. BA has expressed its complete satisfaction with DPCE's performance, and the directors are confident that while DPCE maintains its present standards BA will continue to use its services. BA has awarded DPCE a further contract at a third site, at Bealine House, Ruislip. for an initial three year period from 1st January, 1982.

National Girobank awarded DPCE a contract for an initial five year period, which commenced in May, 1982, to provide a service on site at Bootle, Merseyside to maintain document reading equipment. Since commencement significant additions have been made to this contract and further additions are expected.

In December, 1979 British Telecom awarded DPCE a one year contract to maintain its London Airport Cargo E.D.P. System ("LACES") at Heathrow and Gatwick. On expiry of that contract, it awarded DPCE a contract, expected to continue for ten years, to maintain its ACP 80 system, which was the successor to LACES. The revenues from this contract have increased substantially since its commencement. Further British Telecom contracts followed for the

In January, 1980 KLM awarded DPCE a contract to maintain part of its central site at Amstelveen in The Netherlands. As a result of successful performance, DPCE was awarded a contract for an initial five year period to provide an on site and on call service to maintain all of the central site equipment. An additional contract was awarded with effect from 1st January, 1983 to maintain the KLM Cargo computer system at Schiphol Airport.

As at 1st June, 1983 the contracts described above were generating some 60 per cent. of DPCE's marketing technique is to approach prospective customers with a view to making a presentation leading to a formal proposal and the negotiation of a maintenance contract. DPCE does little advertising as it considers that a direct approach to selected prospective customers is more cost effective. It does, however, produce a regular newsletter which is circulated to over five hundred organisations and individuals including existing and prospective customers.

DPCE seeks the custom of major companies and public sector institutions which have large computer installations. The directors consider that the potential market for its services is very substantial and that only a small percentage of computer maintenance is currently contracted to independent companies. They believe that this market share will increase as the benefits of independent computer maintenance become more widely recognised and successful performance and market exposure further enhance the credibility of companies such as DPCE. There are certain trends in the computer industry which will affect DPCE and the service which it offers, but the directors do not consider they will be prejudicial to DPCE's growth.

- (a) a slow but definite trend towards remote diagnostics, whereby faults can be traced away from the machine and the faults rectified by semi-skilled staff: progress in this field to date has been limited, but in any event DPCE sees the separation of customers from a manufacturer's skilled engineering service as working ultimately in its favour;
- the improved reliability and reduced cost of equipment with a concomitant reduction of manufacturer's maintenance charges, particularly in respect of central processing units: this does not, however, result in a net reduction of DPCE's market as it is more than offset by the increased use, and greater sophistication, of the peripheral equipment attached to central processing units; and
- a trend towards distributed processing, in response to which DPCE has organised itself to provide maintenance on remotely located networks as well as central sites.

Experience with customers leads DPCE to believe that organisations with large and complex systems frequently perceive advantages in using independent maintenance, notably:

- competitive pricing resulting in cost saving;
- arrangements tailored specifically to the needs of customers, including if required, 24 hours per day presence of engineers specifically dedicated to the customer's site, thus increasing available system time;
- protection against withdrawal of maintenance by the manufacturer or equipment
- total systems maintenance of mixed equipment, eliminating contention between manufacturers over the allocation of responsibility for faults;
- control over capital expenditure because DPCE has no vested interest in up-grading the equipment or declaring it obsolete:
- greater freedom to purchase plug-compatible, add-on and second-user equipment, in order to make the best use of financial resources:

Competition '

DPCE's principal competitors are the equipment suppliers who traditionally offer a maintenance service for their own equipment. As well as providing a source of revenue, this service has enabled the manufacturers to maintain close contact with their customers and thereby assist in securing further sales. Some manufacturers have at times made it difficult for DPCE to gain access to documentation, diagnostic facilities and spare parts, and DPCE continues to encou some resistance. Nevertheless, owing to the existence of anti-trust laws in the USA, DPCE has been able to obtain documentation, diagnostic facilities and spare parts from the USA even when encountering resistance in the UK. Furthermore, the directors consider that DPCE now has good working relationships with nearly all the major manufacturers.

There are several computer maintenance companies in the UK which might provide competition for DPCE in the future. They have not, however, proved a significant force to date. Most of these companies concentrate on minicomputers, microcomputers and smaller DPCE has a lease for a period of twenty-five years from 25th March, 1978 of premises at 6 Broad Street, Wokingham, Berkshire. The rent is currently £36,000 per animum. DPCE will have insufficient space in this building by the end of 1983 and is currently negotiating for the acquisition of larger premises in Wokingham, comprising approximately 9,000 square feet at an annual rent likely to be slightly more than twice the rent for the existing premises (which will be disposed of in due course).

DPCE's only other permanent accommodation is an office in The Netherlands shared with NVO Computer Leasing B.V. ("NVO") to which DPCE (Nederland) BV ("DPCE (NL)") pays a nominal rent. In additional parts in the UK and The Netherlands premises in the UK and The Netherlands.

DIRECTORS, MANAGEMENT AND EMPLOYEES

C. G. Clive, aged 46, was appointed the chairman of the Company on its formation in 1981. He has a degree in electrical engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and an MBA from Harvard Business School, and has been connected with the computer industry for MUCH from Plarvard Business School, and has been connected with the computer industry for 25 years. His career has included periods at IBM and as a vice-president of Bankers Trust Co. During his time with the latter he helped to build up its London merchast banking subsidiary, Bankers Trust International, and he has participated in starting up or developing a number of companies in high technology and computer related fields. He is currently joint managing director of Thompson Clive & Partners where he manages two venture capital funds concentrating on high technology investment in the UK and the USA. He is the chairban, or a director, of a number of small to medium sized companies, mainly in the high technology field.

K. G. Meadows, aged 47, was appointed managing director in 1981. After graduating from Oxford University, Mr. Meadows spent four years on the marketing side of British-American Tobacco in Eastern Europe and South America. In 1963 he first entered the computer field by joining Burroughs Machines. He left to join English Electric Computers, now ICL, in 1967, where he occupied various management posts, including that of London area manager for Baric Computing Services. In 1972 he was recruited by First National City Bank of New York, now Citibank, in order to plan and manage a European computer services network. When this project was aborted in 1974 he joined IMS Lycrete as international marketing manager. Following a brief period with Marcol Computer Services, he joined the UK division of DPCE Pty, as general manager in 1979. Pty. as general manager in 1979.

C. R. E. Brooke, aged 52, was appointed a director in 1981. He is currently chief executive of Candover Investments, and has held posts as deputy managing director of the Industrial Reorganisation Corporation from 1966 to 1969, an executive director of S. Pearson & Son from 1971 to 1979, and group managing director of EMI for a short period until it was merged with Thorn Electrical Industries in 1980.

J. D. Cassidy, aged 46, was appointed a director in 1982. After graduating from London University he spent ten years with the Decca Navigator Company originally as a development engineer, then as chief engineer and finally as general manager of various overseas subsidiaries in Nigeria, the Middle East and the USA. He left Decca in 1970 to concentrate on the computer industry and joined GTE International becoming their sales manager in 1971 and undertaking managerial training in the UK and the USA. In 1973 he joined IBM and was responsible for selling large systems into the distribution industry. Subsequent training in point of sale management systems followed as a precursor to participation in IBM's team for the retail store industry. He strent two years as marketing director of BIS Applied Systems, a major systems industry. He spent two years as marketing director of BIS Applied Systems, a major systems bonse, before joining DPCE as sales manager in 1979. He became sales and marketing director

L. G. Stopford Sackville, aged 50, was appointed a director in June, 1983. He qualified as a chartered accountant in 1959, since when he has had extensive experience working for a wide range of companies, principally in the financial and mineral resources sectors. He has been a director of a number of major companies including Charter Consolidated, Selection Trust, Mineral and Resources Corporation and Anglo American Corporation of South Africa. He was chairman of Cape Industries from 1979 to 1980, having been a director since 1970, and of Beralt Tin & Wolfram from 1972 to 1980. He is currently a non-executive director of Anglo American Gold Investment Company and Chairman of Bardsey and Union Jack Oil Company. E. H. Tordoff, aged 36, was appointed finance director in January, 1983. After qualifying as a chartered accountant in 1968 he spent two years as a partner in a provincial practice before joining Peat Marwick Mitchell in Jamaica. On his return to England he lectured in audit and accountancy for two years at Hull College of Commerce and then became group accountant with the Bishop's Move group. He joined DPCE in 1977 as financial controller and became finance director of DPCE (UK) in 1982. He is also company secretary.

D. A. Travers, aged 39, was appointed a director in 1982. After serving an apprenticeship with Thorn Electrical Industries he joined Sperry Univac as a computer engineer in 1965. He was with Sperry Univac continuously from 1965 until he joined DPCE, apart from a period of 18 months when he was engaged by Burroughs Machines on its Barclays Bank project, and by Computer Field Maintenance as a project engineer. During his time with Sperry he held various engineering and management positions and, as site manager, was directly responsible for the installation and management positions and, as site manager, was directly responsible for the installation and management of the Trans Australian and BA West London Air Terminal computer systems. He joined DPCB in 1976 as a site manager and was appointed engineering manager in 1978. In 1981 he became operations director of DPCE(UK).

Senior Management

The operating subsidiaries of the Company also have the following directors:

M. Grieg-Gran, aged 35, was appointed engineering director of DPCE (UK) in January, 1983, having previously been engineering manager with specific responsibility for servicing ICL systems and new projects including the National Girobank contract. Prior to joining DPCE in 1976 he worked with IBM for two years and was on the technical support staff of Sperry Univac from 1969 until 1975.

R. J. Marshall, aged 40, was appointed the purchasing director of DPCE (UK) in 1982. He spent 7 years in the Royal Air Force, and worked for Honeywell as a technical support engineer and for Sperry Univac as a customer engineer. He joined DPCE Pty. in Australia in 1972 as an engineer, and held a number of managerial positions up to 1978, when he transferred to the UK division.

N. J. van Onselen, aged 38, became part-time sales director of DPCE (NL) in April, 1983. After studying at the Technical University of Delft, he joined the National Aerospace laboratory as a programmer, later moving to IBM. In 1971 he joined Data 100 Systems, holding a number of marketing positions, before moving in 1978 to ITEL, a company involved in selling and broking computers. In 1981 he formed NVO, and since 1981 he has acted as consultant to DPCE (NL).

DPCE operates through a management scructure of area and site managers, all but one of whom were previously engineers with DPCE. It is DPCE's policy to encourage promotion from within and to create customer awareness throughout the organisation.

DPCE has approximately 160 employees of whom about 25 are based at Wokingham in Berkshire, 2 at Zeist in The Netherlands and the remainder at customers' premises. An analysis of the employees by function shows:

Operations and engineering Marketing Support services Finance

100 About 80 per cent. of the employees are aged 40 or under and some 30 per cent. are aged 30 or under. Most of the labour used is skilled, and this is reflected in the average total remuneration which is approaching £15,000 per annum. DPCE offers excellent career opportunities for its engineers and has experienced a low rate of staff turnover.

DPCE provides a non-contributory pension scheme for all permanent UK employees and executive directors over the age of 21 with more than six months service. The pension scheme executive directors over the age of 21 with more than six months service. The pension scheme provides its members with free life assurance equal to four times basic earnings. Based on a valuation carried out by the Scottish Life Assurance Company, the funds of the scheme as at 1st October, 1982 were sufficient to meet the accrued liabilities. DPCE also bears the cost of a permanent health insurance scheme which provides benefits in the event of prolonged periods of sickness, and of insuring its employees with B.U.P.A.

Profit sharing scheme

DPCE is in the course of establishing a profit sharing scheme to be approved by the Inland. Revenue under the Finance Act 1978 (as amended), a summary of which is set out in paragraph 8 of Appendix 4. It is estimated that the cost of the profit sharing scheme will not exceed the cost of the current profit sharing arrangements, which it replaces.

Following The Offer for Sale, the directors of the Company and nine senior employees of DPCE will hold a total of 1,712,500 ordinary shares of 5p each, representing 14.5 per cent. of

PROCEEDS OF THE OFFER FOR SALE AND WORKING CAPITAL

Proceeds of the Offer for Sale

The proceeds of the Offer for Sale will be applied: (a) in paying to the Company in respect of 1,962,000 new ordinary shares of 5p each to be subscribed by Lazard Brothers & Co., Limited ("Lazards") the sum of £3,217,015, being the minimum tender price of 170p per share less a commission of 4.25p per share (exclusive of VAT) and a fee to Lazards;

(b) in paying to the shareholders of the Company as at 1st July, 1983 a sum as respect of each of those, shares equal to the amount (if any) by which the striking price exceeds the minimum tender price; and in paying to such shareholders in respect of a total of 1,907,000 ordinary shares of 5p each sold by them to Lazards a sum equal to the striking price less a commission of 4.25p per share (exclusive of VAT).

These arrangements are set out in greater detail under "Offer for Sale agreement" in paragraph 2 of Appendix 4:

Out of the proceeds receivable by the Company, estimated to amount to £2.886 million net of companies, £787,500 will be used to repay the principal of the 16 per cent. Undertured Loan Stock 1983/88 of the Company on or before 31st July, 1983 at £105 per cent. £847,500 to redeem its outstanding 11 per cent. cumulative redeemable preference shares of £1 each on or before 31st August, 1983 at £13p per share, and the balance to finance the expansion of DPCE's business, in particular the cost of establishing new contracts, and to provide working capital.

The directors are of the opinion that, taking account of available bank facilities and the net proceeds of the Offer for Sale receivable by the Company, DPCE will have sufficient working capital for its present requirements.

DIVIDENDS

In lieu of a final dividend, an interim dividend totalling £12,262 (equivalent to approximately 0.1p per ordinary share of 5p following the reorganisation of the Company's share capital) was

The shares now being offered for sale will rank in full for all dividends hereafter declared, paid or made on the ordinary share capital of the Company. The directors intend, in the absence of unforeseen curcumstances, to recommend dividends for the year ending 30th June, 1984 totalling not less than 2p per ordinary share. It is intended that an interim dividend of 0.7p will be paid in February, 1984 and the final dividend will be paid in October, 1984.

DPCE's business has been consistently profitable throughout the period. On the basis of the profit estimate, turnover and profits before loan stock interest have grown by 45 per cent. and 44 per cent. compound respectively over the five years ended 30th June, 1983 and by 51 per cent, and 56 per cent. compound respectively over the three years ended 30th June, 1983.

The directors estimate that in the year ended 30th June, 1983 turnover attributable to the operations in The Netherlands accounted for approximately 9 per cent. of DPCE's total DPCE's success in developing new business and increasing its income over the last few years has been matched by its success in recruiting, training and managing staff to enable consistent levels of profitability and overall margins to be maintained.

The effective rate of taxation has been between 37 and 46 per cent. for the five years ended 30th June, 1982 and, for the year ended 30th June, 1983, it is expected to be not more than 34 per cent. These low rates are attributable to accelerated capital allowances and other reliefs.

The earnings per ordinary share for the years ended 30th June; 1981, 1982 and 1983 were reduced by the significant preference dividends which arose as part of the financing of the purchase by the Company of DPCE (UK).

The directors estimate that the profit before loan stock interest for the year ended 30th June, 1983 was £1.3 million. Coopers & Lybrand and Thornton Baker, and Lazards, have reported on the profit estimate and their letters are reproduced in Appendix 3.

The pro forms earnings per ordinary share following the Offer for Sale have been calculated on the estimated pro forms profit after taxation for the year ended 30th June, 1983, the number of shares which will then be in issue, and the net proceeds of the Other for Sale available to the Company after repayment of the 16 per cent. Unsecured Loan Stock 1983/88 and redemption of the 11 per cent. cumulative redeemable preference shares of £1 each of the Company. It has been assumed that the balance net of expenses, would have earned a return of 10 per cent. before

On the basis of the pro forms profit estimate, a tax charge of 37 per cent, and 11,781,000 ordinary shares in issue following the Offer for Sale, earnings per ordinary share are 7.6p. If a notional charge for corporation tax were provided at the rate of 52 per cent. on the pro forms estimated profit, the earnings per ordinary share would be 5.8p.

At the minimum tender price of 170p per ordinary share and on the basis of pro forma earnings per ordinary share of 7.6p the price/earnings multiple is 22.4: based on a notional fully taxed figure of 5.8p per ordinary share it would be 29.3.

Based on the profit enimate for the year ended 30th June, 1983, DPCE's profits before loan stock interest have increased by six times over the past five years, and by nearly four times over the three years since 1st July, 1980. DPCE's future is closely linked to the development of the computer industry as a whole and, as relative expenditure on services increases, the strongly computer industry as a whole and, as relative expenditure on services increases are already, customer-orientated nature of DPCE's services can be expected to become more highly valued. The directors therefore expect the business of DPCE and its revenue and profit to continue to grow in real terms. The directors expect that the profit after tax for the six months ending 31st December, 1983 will represent a material improvement over the results for the equivalent period in the preceding year.

In the view of the directors, DPCE's present market has considerable potential for development, and new markets are available, primarily in the UK, Europe and the USA. Future growth will come from a wider acceptance of the independent maintenance concept among potential customers and an expansion of DPCE's capabilities in terms of manpower and expertise. While DPCE currently has no difficulty in recruiting engineering staff of the calibre required, the directors recognise the need to develop the management expertise of DPCE's engineers to handle the increasing business, and they are confident that this can be achieved.

The directors believe that with its competence and experience DPCE is capable of leading the development of independent maintenance in the rapidly expanding markets for computer technology.

The current cost accounts, which and in summarised form, have been prepared by reference to current cost principles in conformity with Statement of Standard Accounting Practice No. 16. The accounting policies are the same as those used in the historical cost accounts except as set out below:—

Processes and separation of plant and equipment and office equipment has been based on appropriate indices compiled by the government statistical service. The gross current cost of contract equipment has not been adjusted as this equipment is not increasing in cost.

The gross current cost of contract establishment costs has been based on internally produced estimates incorporating DPCE's pay increases over the relevant periods.

Monetary working capital

Since net corrent liabilities exist no adjustment has been made for monetary working capital. The amount of net current liabilities has been included with net borrowings in calculating the generity

Gearing adjustment represents that portion of the current cost adjustments which is attributable to the net barrowings and therefore is not taken into account when calculating the current cost profit attributable to the ordinary shareholders. The gearing adjustment has been calculated using the opening and closing current cost balance sheets.

1st July, 1983

We have reviewed the accounting policies and calculations adopted in arriving at the profit estimate of DPCE. Holdings pic and its subadiaries for the year ended 30th June, 1983 as set out in the paragraph headed "Profit Estimate" of the prospectus to be dated 4th July, 1983. The profit estimate, for which you, as directors, are solely responsible, has been prepared under the historical cost convention, and is based on audited accounts for the nane months ended 31st March, 1983, management accounts for April and May, 1983 and an estimate of results for June, 1983.

In our opinion, the profit estimate, so far as the accounting policies and calculations are concerned, has been properly compiled and is presented on a base consistent with the accounting policies normally adopted by DPCE Holdings plc and its subsidiaries.

THE ARTS

John Russell Taylor, writing on this page yesterday, found an 'extraordinary charge' in the work of Malcolm Morley, who is currently exhibiting at the Whitechapel Gallery.
Interview by Roger Berthoud

A marriage of heart and head

Not many professional artists have started their careers in prison. The exhibition at the Whitechanel Galery of the work of Malcolm Morley. a 51-year-old British painter living in New York since 1958, is in a way a monument to those who believe that society gains if prisoners are treated humanely, and to those prepared to help them. In Morley's case it was a local painter who took an art class while he was serving a three-year sentence at Wormwood Scrubs. "If anyone out there is still doing such things, carry on!" Moriey says. There was little that was normal in Morley's early life. Born in Highgate, he never knew who his father was -There was some talk that he may have been an Italian, or an orphan adopted by an Italian family." When he was six, his mother married a sour Welshman called Evans (Morley was his mother's name). Young Malcolm was fascinated by the sea, and used to make balsa-wood models of famous liners. After attending a minor boarding state of two, he went to a caval and state of seal and state. naval cadets' school in Surrey. Later be served as a galley-boy on some notably stormy trips on an ocean-going tug before ending up, for reasons still too painful to disclose, first in a borstal near Birmingham and then in the Scrubs.

The art teacher's encouragement really gave me this feeling of worth-whileness". Morley recalls. "Then I read Last for Life [about van Gogh] and that really got me going." While on parole - he had been a model a waiter in a restaurant, he served prisoner - he worked his way down to Comwall, having read about the St To Cornwall, having read about the St.

Ives artist colony, selling topographical watercolours en route to earn his keep. His probation officer spotted his talent. He got a night job at a Lyous Corner House; and by day, for a year, he attended Camberwell School of Art. One of his first buyers was Sir John Mills, who admired a painting he was doing in Richmond of a house Romney had lived in. Then Sir Richard Attenborough anted one. Morley could "go out on the street and make out".

When he heard about Picasso on his second day at Camberwell, he felt has second day at Camberwell, he felt that artist's surge of power and understood his significance. Every prison, he explained, is run by a charismatic daddyo, to whom even the warders defer. "I recognized Picasso as the daddyo of painting, who in turn had a daddyo, Cézanne." On then to the Royal Collège of Art, where he felt rather out of it On then to the Royal College of Art, where he felt rather out of it, suspecting he was being used as an angry young man. But he loved the girls there, and overlapped with painters like Peter Blake, Jo Tilson, Dick Smith and Robyn Denny.

He went to New York in 1958 partly because he felt the excitement of the Tate Gallery's 1956 exhibition of contemporary American painting.

· Listening to Morley is a fairly overwhelming experience. He talks with great articulateness and charm, and at high speed. Perhaps at first he is feeling defensive, since he packs references to Sartre's La Nausée, James Joyce, Schoenberg and Delacroix into the first few minutes, as well as an ainusing description of why he claims to have been educated by weight in the Scrubs, he says, they were allowed only two books a week, and he used to sell food to the librarians to ensure they gave him good, heavy, long-lasting tomes like the works of Theodore Dreiser. One imagines his psychiatrist - he has spent 12 years in analysis - must have had a strenuous if informative can writers like Alvin Toffier and Norman O. Brown, whose analysis of the conflict between the sophisticated and the primitive in man, the split between body and head, libido and ego, touches on one of the central themes of his paintings. When we grow up, Morley explains, we have to give up the instant gratification of our desires or libido. But there is a constant danger of going too far in giving either the libido or the ego its ead, so to speak - especially for the artist, who is expected to break through frontiers. That's really what the work is all about - trying to integrate the whole self into one thing . . . each picture is another me." He hopes that those who see his paintings will be able to share at least part of his experience, and aims to hit their unconscious through the central nervous system, so they experience it like a tingling under the skin".

We can all extend our capacities almost endlessly, he believes. "You can imagine that a piano is only a bit cut out of a keyboard going to infinity at either end. The idea is to keep enlarging the range of the keyboard." His own life seems to exemplify that belief.

The reactions of those who see his works reflect what they are at that moment, he believes, just as for him they are an attempt to establish his own identity, uniting heart and head. He is both painter and stroke-by-stroke spectator, and each painting is a cycle of losing, gaining and evolving He once slashed a painting he had sold for a much-needed 40,000 dollars and handed back the cheque. "It was a form of renunci-

Refreshingly, Morley finds New York "more provincial than it can ever imagine". Yet, like some Flying Englishman, he feels condemned to serve out his term there and also doubts the capacity of the English to respond to his work. In mastering those disguises and subterfuges which delay gratification and make people "civilized", he seems to fear we have gone too far in separating the head and body which, in his own work, he tries to unite.

Ada Nield Chew was a formidable woman. An early Campaigner for women's rights, she was the second child and cldest daughter of a family of 13, with all the domestic burdens that entailed. Somehow she acquired considerable literary skill and wrote a series of letters to a local paper exposing conditions. She was fired and became an itinerant socialist preacher, delivering broadsides from a converted soup van, called The Clarion Van after the socialist

Her pioneering gained her little credit but her daughter Doris, now 83, a retired history teacher from Burnley, sought to remedy this in a biography which formed the basis for Alan Plater's play, celebrating that van, from Granada last night.

Daughter Doris, who travelled with her mother and did not attend school - mother sent her to a private one - until she was seven, acted as a guide in the play. Father, who married Ada when he was the van-driv-er, stayed at home later. Being married to such an independent lady must have had its trials.

Anyway Ada, working for the Women's Trade Union League, did a sterling job that had to be done. One suspects she might have succeeded in any sphere had that sweatshop not impelled her to launch herself against the capitalist ramparts.

Moira Armstrong directed this glimpse of socialist and feminist history and Howard Baker produced. The part of Ada as an adult was resolutely played by Diane Fletcher but the dramatization left me with more curiosity about the intri-cacies of Chew family life than Michael Sloan has evidently been struck by the sad fact that they don't write them like Agatha Christie any more; perhaps because house parties are not what they used to be. So why not select a familiar environment that has the same effect of cutting a small group of suspects off from the outside world: a Tube interior, for example?

The answer to that, of course, is that strangers in the tube do not converse. And Mr Sloan's play never recovers from the opening solecism of unleashing a flood of noisy theatrical talk in an ultra-realist setting that forbids anything beyond a manufacture of anything beyond a murmur of apology when somebody stands on your foot.

the Ravel Quartet, with its shimmering tremolandi and dissolving harmonies, could well have been an abral mirage. But, in the hands of the Orlando Quartet, it had vivid physical presence, the opening gentle only through its perfectly judged pace and the firm assurance of its long, smooth lines.

There was never any temptation to peck at its expressive minutiae: each tiny modulation of accent or dynamic was dovetailed and absorbed into its textual counterpoint. Each moment of hesitation and reassertion was, similarly, part of a broad flow of design, and most beautifully so in the entry into the quiet undertones of the recapitulation.

Istvan Parkanyi, the firtst violin, took a firm, though never over-obtrusive, lead in these matters, yet it was Ferdinand Erblich's viola that epitomized the character of the third movement. Following his example, the timbre and voice of each instrument reflected

Here the disquieting factor was not that he took the music at an unusually measured tread but that he gave it little shape or sense of direction. The phrasing was plain; passages that can be magical and thrilling (the glorious shift of key at bars 193-4, for instance) remained solidly earthbound. Brahms's Screnade in D fared little better. In the third movement the orchestra could well have reached some agreement over the syncronization of their double dots, and in parts the level of dynamics neither followed the score nor was specifically appropriate to the music. # Relief over ship time charter is refused

Scandinavian Trading Tanker Co AB v Flota Petrolera Ecuatoriana Before Lord Diplock, Lord Keith of Kinkel, Lord Scarman, Lord Roskill and Lord Bridge of Harwich

[Speeches delivered June 30] The High Court had no inrisdiction to grant relief against a shipowner's right, under a time charter not by demise, to withdraw the vessel on the charterens' failure to pay the hire as provided for by the withdrawal clause in the charter. The House of Lords dismissed an appeal by the charterers under a Shelltime 3 charter, Flota Petrolera Ecuatoriana, from the Court of Appeal (Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice May and Lord Justice Robert Goff)

Mr Johan Steyn, QC and Mr.

Anthony Bompas for the charterers;
Mr Kenneth Rokison, QC and Mr
Timothy Saloman for the owners,
Scandingvian Trading Tanker Co

AB.

LORD DIPLOCK said that their Lordships had beard argument on one question only: "Has the High Court any jurisdiction to grant relief against the exercise by a shipowner of his contractual right, under the withdrawal clause in a time charter, to withdraw the vessel from the service of the charterer upon the latter's failure to make payment of an instalment of the hire in the manner, and at a time that is not latter than, this for which the withdrawal clause provides?"

His Lordship should like to say how helpful he had found both the typowritten summary of the propositions intended to be developed and the chromological table of relevant events that leading counsel for the charterers had handed in at the beginning of his oral argument.

the beginning of his oral argument.
That response to suggestions recently made in the House had shown how useful it could be in shortening the time needed for the hearing and in concentrating their Lordships' (and counsel's) attention on the points essential to the argument being presented.

Mardoff Feach & Co Ltd v Attica Sea Carriers Corporation of Liberia (The Laconia) ([1977] AC 850, 873-

A time charter, milest it was a charter by demise, with which their Lordships were not concerned, transferred to the charterer no interest in or right to possession of the waterly in the charterer. the vessel; it was a contract for the vessel; it was a commack for services to be rendered to the character by the shipowner. Being a contract for services it was the very prototype of a contract of which before the fusion of law and equity a court would never grant specific

An unbroken line of authority in the House of Londs had held that, if the withdrawal clause so provided, the shipowner was emitted to withdraw the services of the vessel from the charterer if the latter failed to pay an instalment of hire in precise compliance with the provisions of the charter.

To grant an imputation restraining the shipowner from exercising his right of withdrawal of the vessel from the charters's service, though

That was, in his Lordship's view, sufficient reason in itself to compel rejection of the suggestion that the equitable principle of relief from forfeiture was juristically capable of extension so as to grant to the court a discourter to account a thin court. a discretion to prevent a shipowner from exercising his strict contractual rights under a withdrawal clause in a time charter that was not a charter by demise.

In The Afovor ([1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep 469), Mr Justice Lloyd had sought to extract from Lord Wilherforce's speech in Stiloh Spinners Ltd v Harding ([1973] AC 691) a more general proposition that wherever a party to a contract was wherever a party to a common way to by its terms given a right to terminate it for a breach consisting only of non-payment of a sum of money and the purpose of incorporating the right of termination in the contract was to secure the payment of that sum, there was an equitable jurisdiction to grant relief against the exercise of the right of termination.

That Lord Wilberforce's mainly historical statement, at p 722, had historical statement, at p 722, had never been meant to apply generally to contracts not involving any transfer of proprietary or possessory rights but providing for a tight to determine the contract in default of punctual, payment of a sum of money payable under it was clear from his speech in The Lannia. Speaking of a time character, he had said, at p 870. "It must be obvious that this is a very different type of relief against the operation of a withdrawal clause in a time charter, there were practical reasons of legal policy for declining to create any such new jurisdiction out of sympathy for charterers.

The traight market was notoriously volatile. If it rose rapidly during the period of a time charter, the charterer was the beneficiary of the windfall, which he could realize if he wanted to by subchartering at the then market rates. What withdrawal of the vessel did was to transfer the benefit of the windfall from charterer to shipowner.

from charterer to shipowner.

His Lordship would dismiss the appeal. He did so with the reminder that his reasoning had been directed exclusively to time charters that were not by demise. Identical considerations would not be applicable to bureboat charters and it would in his Lordship's view be tunvise for their Lordships to express any views about them. express any views about them. Lord Keith, Lord Scarman, Lord Roskill and Lord Bridge agreed.

injunction, to preserve assets within the jurisdiction, had been issued against that defendant, the defend-ant was not to be taken to have submitted to the jurisdiction with regard to the main action merely regard to the main action merely because he had later applied to discharge the Mareva injunction.

Moreover the mere fact that a Mareva injunction was sought did not of itself confer junisdiction on the court to grant leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction under Order 11, rule 1 (i) of the Rules of the Surgerne Court the Supreme Court.

Mr Justice Parker so held in the Commercial Court of the Queen's Bench Division on June 29, granting an application by the second defendant, a Norwegian bank, to set aside the service on them, out of the jurisdiction, of a writ issued by the plaintiffs. HIS LORDSHIP said that a defendant on whom a writ had been served out of the jurisdiction had, by virtue of Order 12, rule 8, 28 days in which to contest the court's jurisdiction by applying to set aside service of the writ.

Frequently when leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction was granted, a Mareya injunction was also issued, and if a subsequent challenge to such an injunction involved submission to the court's in challenge

Obikova and Others v Silvernorth Ltd and Others

Where, on an ex parte application, leave had been granted to issue a writ against a defendant out of the jurisdiction and a Mareva involved submission to the court's jurisdiction with regard to the substantive action, a defendant would be deprived of the right conferred on him under Order 12, rule 3 if he wished to free his assets before the 28 days had expired.

Order 11, rule 1 (i) gave the court jurisdiction to grant leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction if an injunction was sought in the action.

"Injunction" there meant one which could be granted by way of substantial relief at the trial, and a simple Mareva injunction was not sufficient.

ICC arbitration precludes costs security

Bank Mellat v Helleniki Techniki SA

The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Kerr, Lord Justice Waller and Lord Justice Robert Goff) held on June 28 that, where a contract provided that any arbitration should take place in London but the substantive law was Iranian, where the original contracting parties and the subject matter had no connexion with this country and the arbitration was to be conducted under the rules of the International Chamber of Commerce, it was inappropriate for the English court to order the claimant to give security for costs under section 12 (6) of the Arbitration Act 1950.

LORD JUSTICE KERR said that all the powers of the court under section 12 (6) were wholly discretionary and their gram or refusal would take account of the relevant contractual provisions and of the requirements of justice in the circumstances of each case. In an international arbitration, particular regard would be given to the connexion the parties or the arbitration had with this country. If foreign parties had agreed to arbitrate in this country under some foreign or international set of rules, such as those of the ICC, the case for the exercise of a purely English discretionary jurisdiction must inevitably be weakened. mevitably be weakened.

The application for security in the present case was sufficiently inconsistent with the scheme and spirit of the ICC rules to make it inappropriate in principle for the court to exercise its discretion in

City Editor's Comment

Rebel institutions in search of power

shareholders who speak for a quarter of the votes in the Rank Organization are in a corner. Their names are among the powerful and wealthy investment institutions in the City. Yet they are beginning to look, at least to the casual observer, rather impotent.

All want a big shake-up of Rank's 19-member board on which sit seven knights and where fewer than half take any day-to-day re-sponsibility in running the company. But none of the nine is sure how to effect that wish. Three months ago they knew. At least, they thought there was agreement with the board that a new executive deputy-chairman should be appointed who would eventually take over complete control. They and other shareholders thought that therewould be a real change to improve the poor return which Rank was getting from substantial assets. Nothing has happened so far.

On Monday, Rank is expected tocome out with first-half profits at least two-thirds of the figure reported for the whole of 1982. It should also maintain the dividend.

So Rank is far from on its back. And that makes it harder for institutions to effect change.

There is also the more practical point of where to find the right person to run Rank efficiently and in doing so, to carry the incumbent board with him. Normally, companies are in a much worse state before board changes are demanded and managements become much more attentive to shareholders' demands. That is why the institutions, which include the National Coal Board and Save & Prosper, must be seen to get results. There are a number of options. With 25 per cent of the shares, the institutions could let it be known that a takeover bid might tempt them to part with their strategic holding. Alternatively, they could call a special shareholders' meeting and use their voting power to demand board resignations.

Prudential Assurance, the

Both actions would take place in a glare of publicity - something that insti-tutions, until recently at least, have liked to avoid in their relationships with companies.

Howewver, having taken public stand by announcing the recruitment of a new Rank commander at the group's annual meeting, it no longer does them credit to return to the method of coaxing changes behind closed doors.

Building societies in search of cash

The problems now besetting the building societies are highlighted with the publication of Nationwide building society's first-half results.

A slowdown in the growth of gross receipts. and increase in the rate of withdrawals and declining net receipts combined with the unprecedented demand for home loans to produce a decidely uncomfortable situation.

Withdrawals as a percentage of gross receipts have risen from 67 per cent in 1979 to 75 per cent. In other words Nationwide, in common with most other building societies, is hanging on to a smaller proportion of its deposits. Nationwide has been quicker than most in reacting to the changing circumstances, raising £65m during the first half of this year from the money markets by the issue of negotiable bonds The interesting statistic will be the overall figures for money market fundraising, expected to be a gross £100m during June. If the societies are to raise new money in the immediate future, this is the most likely source.

From Richard Hanson,

Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, the world's largest pension fund manager, and Nomura Securities, Japan's largest securities house, have applied for approval of a joint venture investment trust mangement company, the first of its kind in Japan.

Such a Japanese - US venture could have broad implications for foreign pension funds, especially American ones, which have been slow to diversify their portfolios into Japan, It would also add a new dimension to the competition for pension fund management in Japan, where the market is expanding rapidly.

Morgan and Nomura have already agreed in principle to form a joint venture, although many of the details have yet to be worked out. The venture, however, must now be ap-proved by the Japanese finance ministry, which could take some time as various interest groups battle it out. A Morgan-Nomura venture involving trust activities will most likely be strongly opposed by Japanese life insurance companies as well as Japanese trust banks. It would be the first advisory company set up specifically to manage trust funds in Japan,

Mr Harry Goodman, Inta-sun's ebullient chairman, was justifiably smiling yesterday. Despite last year's problems in the package holiday trade, including heavy discounting to maintain volumes, Intasun's results were up to expectations. More particularly, prospects for this summer look better.

Gulliver and his expansive travels

Mr Jimmy Gulliver is at it again. It was no surprise in the city yesterday that Amalgamated Distilled Priducts should accompany its revelation of £4m annual profits with the news that it is holding merger talks with Argyll Foods.

Mr Gulliver controls 12 per cent of ADP and 7 per cent of Argyll through his own James Gulliver Associates: in recent years, the passage of only a few months without an important Guiliver deal has been likely to cause an air of expectation, not to say speculation, on the stock

The ambitious Scot has made no secret of his aim to make Argyli a truly giant food group, to match the big high street retailing names and the likes of Unilever or Grand Metropolitan. He has spouted from the rooftops that the only way to do this in the 1980s is to buy up other companies rather than grow organically like Tesco or Sainsbury.

Section 18 1

"I have stated on a number of occasions," he said in last year's Argyll annual report, "that the very substantial investment and development programmes of the major grocery multiple retailers over recent years have made it increasingly impracticable for another major national grocery retail business to be developed, in order to compete effectively, other than by acquisition or merger."

The same clearly applies in Mr. Gulliver's mind to food. The result, if the ADP merger goes through, would be a group ranging from cash and carry wholesaling to whisky, from freezer centres to oatcakes, with sales around £1.3bn, profits around £30m and a stock market value approaching

Most of this has been built up over four years and few suppose that ADP will mark the end of expansion for Mr Gulliver. ...

So far, the City has been content, with the odd hiccup, to put up the money that Mr Gulliver needs for his expansion via new share capital and loans. grow internally

In February 1981, Argyll paid £20m to buy Oriel Foods from

Mr Gulliver's old emplyers, RCA. When the financial year ended in March 1982, he was able to add up a group turnover

working with him,

On the strength of this, he had little trouble raising funds when he left the Weston empire Although most of Mr Gulli-to buy into the small Oriel ver's interests are in food - the Foods group. "I decided it was time I was running my own show", he said later, "and I also wanted some capital for myself. It was the start of one of the City's happier relationships with would-be venturers.

In the early 1970s Gulliver and Oriel were overshadowed in every sense by Sir James Goldsmith, then busily constructing his giant Cavenham Foods. Apart from the sheer size of Cavenham's operation, Sir James himself was large, ebuilient and aggressive, while Gulliver is compact, quietly Gulliver is compact, quietly spoken, reserved and analytical. But he delivered the goods.

The whole operation is still at conglomerate, bought Oriel for a stage when the City is backing for the record of Argyll itself as to buy a good grocery management team. In the process, it made Gulliver a millionaire and years with RCA, then went back on his own, making invest-ments in ADP, Alpine and, most important, the Manchester meat and butchery business of Louis Edwards, the man who built up both this business and Manchester United. From 1979, this became the genesis of Argyll Foods.

All these businesses had been

At that time Argyll was valued at £44m on the Stock Exchange. Allied, which had been through several phases since it was formed from Liptons, Home & Colonial and Maypole, had a turnover of some £800m. It featured anything from Presto supermarkets to quite small outlets and was not regarded as the pearl of the grocery trade at a time when Sainsbury, Tesco et al were fighting it out at a high level of growth, expansion and con-The takeover marked the biggest hiccup in Mr Gulliver's relationship with the City, as a huge share issue made on an unusual tender basis flopped in unsettled days for the stock market. But the mutual admiration between Mr Gulliver and the City survived with better than expected early results from the merger.

And Mr Gulliver had won

what he wanted. "We are now in the league of major food retailers in Britain", he reported. If most of the businesses were familiar, Argyll, as number four in retailing, had become an important new force in the food industry.

Meanwhile, he had not been idle at ADL. The company was built up from a variety of small and lesser-known whisky brands by Mr Ellis Goodman but ran into trouble and a small loss in 1977. Recovery was on the way when Mr Gulliver arrived and took over the chair. By 1982, after acquisitions and disposals, profits reached almost £1.5m. But the big move came last October in a remarkable £22m deal that made ADP the seventh biggest bourbon company in the US and sent Mr Goodman off to Chicago to run the new American acquisition, now clearly booked as the core of Argyll's ambitions to follow Sir James Goldsmith into

North America. A new enlarged Argyll, will have twin food and retailing divisions. It will still be dominated by the supermarket business, but more so by Messrs Gulliver, Grant and Webster.

In his Statement on the 1983 Accounts, Sir Jack Wellings, CBE, said:

The worldwide recession seriously affected turnover and profits but the surplus arising from property sales enabled a profit before tax to be made. Our companies are healthy, competitive in price and product design and will readily respond to any improvement in the economy.

During the year the Flexible Manufacturing System. SCAMP, set up under a Government development contract, was opened. This development led to a joint venture company with Fanue for the sale and manufacture of robots, the formation of Scamp Systems Ltd. to sell FMS technology and the introduction of CNC machine tools to meet both low cost and high technology requirements.

We have every reason to hope that we will be able to continue to increase our overseas market penetration and, if the home market does improve, will be able to return to an acceptable level of profits.

Rossminster lessons remain unlearned

By the time leading counsel and the attorney general had persuaded the Island Revenue not to prosecute the principals in the Rossimster affair, both the idea of criminal charges and indeed Rossministe itself had become irrelevances. And what a relief that is for anyone who cares about a decent society free from Italianate cant, in which laws apply to Criminal proceedings were an irrelevance because the Inland Revenue achieved its objectives more satisfactorily through the courts; Rossminster is an irrelevance because those court desisions put an end, for the time being at least, to the genesis of its ultimately anti-social business.

People have always sought to minimize tax. But in the permissive world of the 1960s and 1970s with tax rates sometimes at absurdly high nominal levels, it became a half accepted feature of individualism to use any means to thwart the will of Parliament and dodge your dues.

The poor used the illegal

Householders were proud of saving money by cash-only payments. The rich and the big corporations could afford tax experts to do the job within the letter of the law.

Mr Roy Tucker was one of the most brilliant tax experts of them all. The Rossminster group, which he created with fellow accountant Mr Ronald Plummer, converted artificial tax avoidance schemes from a cottage industry to the pro-duction line, complete with sophisticated marketing, standard packages and even a sort

A typical Rossminster fili-in-the-blanks package might involve 25 transactions, carried out in precise order over a seven-day period. They used hundreds of cardborad companies, making nonsense of the legitimate use of com-

They used the opinions of leading tax counsel as sales literature, leading some to pender the bar's pro-lessional morality. And one scheme at least made use of charitable status, passing £50m through a small charity, of which little was left genuine charitable purposes. The would-be clients queued up, from pop-stars to politicious.

Others were in the game, but Rossminster became the unacceptable face of avoidance for the Inland Revenue which feared it had lost hundreds of millions in taxes. They pur-sued their criminal investiextion through the famous dawn raids mainly because nowhere in civil courts, which tended to take an exquisitely subtle, but almost exclusively literal, reading of the law.

They did challenge the schemes through the civil courts, as much to make life difficult for Rossminster and its clients as for any hope of success. The civil court was the right place, for Messrs Tocker, Plummer and co intended to act within the law. Criminality would have been an oversight.

In the event, the Law Lords reversed their usual stance in the case of W. T. Ramsay. They ruled in effect that they would look through highly artificial schemes involving transactions that had no basis in reality, thus thwarting the aim of eliminating tax. This has foxed all but one of the Rossminster schemes and left a lot of clients facing nasty assessments from the Rev-

The judges learnt a lesson, that too legalistic an interpeta-tion of statute can undermine the law. But have the politicians and civil servants who shape our tax system learnt the message of the Rossmitterer years?

Surely that message was that if Parliament enacts oppressive tax laws it is inviting non-compliance. Any law that taxes income, gain, capital or goods at much more than 50 per cent is potentially oppressive.

Since then, the top rates of income tax have come down to much more sensible levels, capital gains have been indexed and inheritance tax further emasculated. There has been some movement towards the American system where people are, in a sense, encouraged to avoid tax by poshing their money into

But British tax rates, especially corporation tax, are still far too high and laws too complex. More allowances may be cheaper than lower rates, but open more anomalies and encourage the more discreet tax avoidance indus-

More important, little has been done to ease the crippling taxes on low-level employed incomes, the "poverty trap" overlap between tax and welfare or the stupid restrictions on anemployment pay. We encourage the new mil-lions of poor to join the black economy. And that sans morality among the poor as much as the Rossminsters did among the wealthy and

Dome calls in Shell chief for recovery

Cash-starved Dome Pet-roleum, the leading Canadian tolern, the resonn Canadian oil and gas company that was saved from the brink of bankruptcy almost a year ago, still has a long way to go if it is to return to normalcy.

This problem now becomes the task of Mr John Howard MacDonald, a 55-year-old group treasurer from Royal Dutch Shell, who was given the top executive job at Dome at the company's annual meeting

He replaces the colorful Mr Jack Gallagher, a pioneer in Canadian oil development for country's thornest, most pond-cally sensitive corporate groups.

"My main strength has ben in financial matters," he said and that is clearly why Dome's board hired him. Mr Gallagher had the misfortune of wines-sing the company's fall in a marges of hume debt lest were morass of huge debt last year. He denies rumours that he was squeezed out of the chief executive's role by the company's bankers. He will remain on the board.

Done's bankers say that the company needs $1bn in fresh equity in order to develop normally and they believe the capital will have to come from the federal government and themselves. The refinancing is expected to take place in September. The 51bn injection would be net of any debt principal repayment.

Financial analysts appear unanimous in their view that Dome could not hope to raise anything like $1bn from the nadian public. Investors who participated in a previous issue floated by Dome Canada in early 1981 are likely to recall that the $10 shares are now trading at $6.

Dome's financial health is gradually improving because of the company's cost cutting efforts and a decline in interest rates. Much of Dome's $6.36bn load is being rolled over on a monthly basis. I wondered whether the journey to Bürningham would be worthwhile, with the infernal cacophony of New Street station to be undergone. However, there was a chance that Gatting or Buncher might play an innings, and I knew that the Sage of Longparish would never forgive me if Gatting did, and it was not fully reported.

I travelled back, thinking how well Warwickshire are playing but also how much they owed in this match to their old men, Gifford, Amiss and Willis, I had to wait in the New Street abomination of desolation for more than an hour, but ultimately caught a train which had come from Dundee, where I met an injured singer who had fallen from the stage at Patiochry the night before. Well, that was what the man said, and it was, when you come to think of n no more improbable than Gatting's decision to ask Warwickshire to bat.

By Michael Seely Two-year-old colts and three-year-old fillies will hold centre stage at Newmarket today. Chief Singer is hard to oppose in the July Stakes. Despite his starting price of 20-1. Chief Singer was strongly fancied when he won the Coventry Stakes at Poyel A wort. Royal Ascot.

The colt's gallops with Teamwork had been so extraordinary that Rom Sheather had been unable to believe the evidence of his own eyes. However, the way in which the two-year-old lengthened his stride to go clear in the last furlong must have brought great joy to his connections.

Of his opponents Kalim less won his only two nees in good style for the Aga Khan and Fulke Johnson Houghton. The Newmarket and Houghton. The Newmarket and Bath winner, Captain Singleton, is the representative of Guy Harwood's powerful Stable. The chances of Indigo Jones and Ben Hanbury's Running Bull have also to be respected, but a defeat for Chief Singer would come as something of a surprise.

The Child Stakes sees a rematch between Royal Heroine and Favoridge, who finished second and third, respectively, to Ma Biche in the 1000 Guineas. At the weights it is difficult to oppose Royal Heroine, Page Blanche also comes into the reckoning after her second to Favoridge at Kempton.

The contracts for other foreign signifies, including Whm Kleft (Netherlands) at Pisa, Batista (Brazil) and Michael Laudrup (Denmark) at Lazio and Lado Cock (Belgium) at Inter Milan, are still awaiting approval.

Frizzell is appointed

Jimmy Frizzell has been officially appointed as assistant manager at Manchester City by Billy McNeill, who became manager of the club last week. Frizzell was at Oldham last week. Frizzell was at Oldham for more than 20 years as a player and manager before he was sacked 12 months ago.

McNeill said: "It was important for me to get someone who has proved he was good at his job, and I could not have done better. I have because liment here with a time. brought Jimmy here with a view to establishing a good partnership. It means a lot to us both to get City back where they belong in the top flight. He has a wealth of experience in English football and it was important for me to get someone like that. Jimmy was my first choice.

Frizzell added: "I think I can retizen a lot from him and I hope I can pass something on to him. There is no way I will be a yes-man and Billy has told me already that he doesn't expect that from me."

Paul Dyson, the Coventry centre half, aged 23, is likely to be the fifth player to leave the club since the end of last season. He has had talks with Stoke City, who are also interested in Swansea City midfield player, Robbie James. James, who could cost £250,000 is seen as replacement for Paul Bracewell, who was transferred to Sunderland last week.

Ricky Hill, the Luton midfield player, has been given the go-ahead to resume training after a knoc operation.

Testing the water with a minor tour

A member of the International the unexpurgated Nixon tapes, that as far as he was concerned the Olympic knowledge of the politics of the African could happily sink without trace if that continent posed the question recently: should the IOC be an active party to a policy which is as likely to push South Africa towards civil war as to encourage a route to normality? It is a policy to which Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the IOC, must address himself the moment next year's Olympics are over, if not before.

in all areas of the political sporting debate attitudes are hardening, with the United Nations Committee on Aparthied demanding a code of conduct which would enable the IOC to expel collaborators with South Africa, with the International Cricket Conference turning a deaf ear again to the South African Cricket Union, and Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke putting his Test players on high-level social security as an antidote to temptation.

Catastrophic

Yet of only one thing can we be sure: the greater the polarization, the greater the probability that South Africa will be nudged ifnot into civil war then into the kind of limited strife experienced in Northern Ireland, which the British have come to accept almost as a fact of life but which much of the rest of the world views with incomprehension.

The awful dangers of the South African question is that so many who are involved in positions influence naively still consider it is a matter of who plays what with whom, rather than one of several fuses to something potentially catastrophic. A famous and far from unintelligent England Test cricketer of the 1950s said to me was the price of being able to play ball again with his white mates in South

Next week's MCC ballot - the effective result of which will be known from the post before the argument is aired at County Hall - will be possibly a watershed in the boycott business. A straw poll suggests that John Carlisle's Freedom in Sport body may get a simple majority in support of a Minor Counties standard tour, but not the necessary two thirds majority, and certainly nowhere near the 90 per cent of the general public suggested in the British poll conducted on behalf of the South African Olympic Committee. But even a simple majority would put the MCC in a dilemma: should they move towards the view, to be heard widely outside the cautious committee rooms of the Test and County Cricket Board, even at Lord's, that England should test the water, should call the bluff of the West Indies and Indian governments and see how far they are prepared to subordinate their popular cricketers, to political expediency, especially with India just having won the World Cup. MCC already have tacit West Indies Cricket Board assurance that a tour would not provoke a boycott of Lord's as a Test venue pext summer. Just what would it provoke?

The extraordinary situation in danger of developing is of three Test match camps: the whites (England, Australia and New Zealand), the coloureds (West Indies, India, Pakistan and Sri Janks), and a spell South and Sri Lanka) and a rebel South African circuit of mercenaries, many of them coloured. With the TCCB as well as Australia attempting to give Test cash guarantees to counteract possible defections, the South Africans, return-ing home empty-handed last week, will probably intensify the subvention of leading West Indies and Indian players.

Personally, I am convinced that the best interests of the black man in South Africa, not just in sport, will in the long term be served by getting into the international arena, a view for which I was termed "reactionary" by Victor Gheho, of the United Nation's Committee on Apartheid and chairman of last week's conference in London on sanctions against apartheid.

In vain did one attempt to impress upon some of the delegates the sincerity of one's concern for the black cause. But the committed political activist of the boycott movement will not admit to, nor even contemplate, a middle course of limited readmission for South Africa where the special circumstances of an individual sport could be considered to justify it.

Confrontation

To my hypothetical question or whether the UN committee would approve of the readmission of any sport, where it might be almost exclusively to the black sportsman's ndvantage, Mr Gheho was adamant that nothing would be contemplated till all South African racial laws were abolished. This, he must surely recognize, cannot come about through confrontation, only negotiation, The boycott has, I believe, reached the limit of its political effectiveness.

Mr Gheho repeatedly quoted the principle of the Olympic spirit, yet the Olympic charter expressly forbids discrimination of a country's sportsmen on political grounds. He continually referred to South Africans as meaning exclusively whites, whereas my argument is that black South African sportsmen can give their country a new mixed-race image which can only accelerate a peaceful shift to social integration outside sport.

Some white South Africans are sincerely working towards this goal, and it is as myopic for militant left-wing anti-apartheid politicians - a role which lurks in any thinking man - to deny this is so as for white friends of South Africa to pretend either that sporting arguments can be resolved without reference to political conscience or that there do not still exist many South Africans committed to maintaining the race laws.

There is just a slim hope that sport could still be an arena for reason rather than a whipping block for prejudice -even if South Africa themselves started it. That there is still a sporting case to be argued was illustrated for me last week when I found myself simultaneously quoted in support of opposing documents by Sir Shridath Ramphal Commonwealth general secretary, and by John Carlisle. The argument was equally shown in Ron Pickering's BBC documentary. never mind that the editorial content was balanced 2-1 in support of the boycon and the camerawork unerringly engaged a single sympathy. Quite right. But the future is not just about sympathy, or ideology, but realism.

That requires recognition for in-stance, of the fact that the boycott is the prime if not the only stable platform of the Organization of African Unity, Mr Samaranch is wrong to say that the South African issue must be semled within South Africa. It must be settled by the entire sporting fraternity on a continuous reappraisal of the facts, not on prejudice, of whatever hue,

Mediterranean magic can carry you away Buying property abroad has always been a hazardous business. A different language, culture and legal system have all combined to make the property buyer cautious of parting with substantial sums of Finding good independent advice for buyers has always been difficult although in recent years it has not prevented thousands of Britains acquiring holiday and retirement homes, mainly along the Mediterranean coast in France and Spain, and to some extent along the Atlantic coast of Portugal.

Dealing with reputable British companies and agents has gone some of the way to take the uncertainty out of home buying on the Continent but it will always be worthwhile to do a little homework to ensure that the company selling you the property is actually entitled to sell.

Spain and Portugal are relative newcomers to the international property scene. After all Marbella, which has become popular among the jet set and nouveau riche in the last 20 years, was not much more than a glorified fishing village 40 years ago. Today developments abound, offering the buyer every-thing from time share to villas and apartments. But for the past century the Côte d'Azur has been the most popular locations for wealthy Britons to establish a holiday home. --:

محدًا من المدمل

It was the British aristicracy which established the famous watering holes of the Côte d'Azur a hundred years ago. Cannes and Nice owe much of their popularity to the British rich, especially during the 1920s and 1930s. Much of that early popularity lives on, with wealthy Britons preferring France to Spain as the location for their holiday home. Over the years a few British estate agents have established themselves on the coast using the basis of their London clients as a reason for opening an office in Nice or Cannes. Today few have survived the economic turmoil of the past decade.

One agency which has been operating on the coast for the past six years is SAFI (Société Angio-Française Immobilière) rum by an Englishman, Mr Stuart Baldock, who has lived and worked in France for the past 12 years. Among the British there is inherent suspicion of lawyers, a feeling further exacerbated when dealing with a notaire, the continental equivalent of a conveyanc-ing solicitor. Mr Baldock not only knows French property law, but can talk to the lawyers in their own language, SAFI offers a "handholding" service, taking the purchaser through each stage of the trans-

A member of the French real estate federation, SAFI is indemnified under the French estate agents guarantee fund. It can guide a buyer through the tangled web of French administration which governs building, planning and tax. It also offers a management and rental service.

The Côte d'Azur is still one of the world's most expensive holiday retreats and prices are set to climb still higher because of the Mitterrand government's restrictions on sending money abroad. This means that Frenchmen must find an outlet at home for spare money. Demand for holiday homes in Cannes and Antibes, as well as the surrounding areas, is strong from French and foreigners alike.

At a new development in the hills above Cannes, for example, room apartment covering less than 1,000 sq ft of living accommodation, although with extensive balcony space. This particular scheme, Les Demeures de Cannes-Eden, has been built to high standards of design and construction and is set in delightful grounds.

Farther in from the coast, property is cheaper. A new village development called Mougins le-Haut is located about 20 minutes away from Cannes in a rural setting. Some of the apartments have splendid views of sea and coast as well as the neighbouring countryside.

The developers have managed depart from the sprawl which often characterizes new schemes by laying out the village in a series of concentric circles. Complete with swimming pools, tennis courts, shops and cafes, the development has a self-contained village atmoshas a self-contained vinage attro-phere, although the claim that Mougins le-Haut is "une nouvelle idée du village d'autrefois" may be stretching a point somewhat, Prices here start at £40,000 for a studio apartment and rise to £100,000 for a three-room flat.

The papers

The Daily Ster attacks the "oil moguls" for "playing musical chairs" with petrol prices. "It is not free competition, but economic anarchy. And there is massive suspicion and cynicism throughout the country at this hudicrous dance of the billionaires." It urges the office of Fair Trading to intervene.
